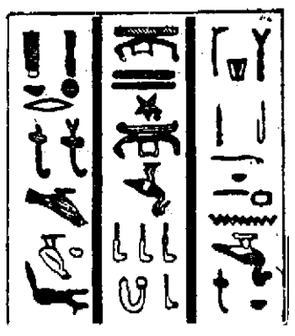
ISRAELITES TOOK CENSUS AFTER LEAVING EGYPT

Almost 4,000 years ago, officers of the Egyptian government began making lists of people in certain parts of the land. It appears that Egypt was the first country ever to take a "census" of any kind.

To take a census, the Egyptians had to know the art of writing. They had learned to write long before their first effort at a census. In early times their writing was made up of "picture-words". Later they set down simple outlines, or signs, which did about the same work as the letters of our modern alphabet. The Egyptians did not, however, have all the letter-sounds of our alphabet.

Ancient Hebrews, or Israelites, lived in Egypt for a period not exactly known. It is likely that the Egyptians taught them about the census. Moses and other leaders took a census at the time of the Exodus, that is, while the Israelites were on their way from Egypt to the Promised Land. Here are words about it, as given in the Bible:



A bit of Egyptian writing

"And the Lord spoke unto Moses . . . . saying, "Take ye the sum of all the children of Israel, every male from 20 years upward, all that are able to go forth to war . . .

"Those that were numbered of the tribe of Reuben were 46,500 . . . Those that were numbered of the tribe of Simeon were 59,300 . . . Those that were numbered of the tribe of Judah were 74,600 . . ."

The total given for the Israelites, not counting the Levites, was 603,550. If these were only men of fighting age, it would mean more than 3,000,000 Israelites, counting women and children.

Six months later, another count was made, and the number of 601,730 was reported. We are told that each man in the census had to give half a shekel to the church, and that the half-shekels were counted instead of the men.

After the Israelites reached the Promised Land, their king, David, ordered a new census, even though he knew the people did not like to be counted. David's census was spread over nine months and 20 days.

In the Book of Samuel, we read that "there were in Israel 800,000 valient men who drew the sword, and the men of Judah were 500,000."
