Beaver Dam Warden Nabs 4 Fishermen

BEAVER DAM — Warden William Field, made four arrests during the weekened for violations of the state's fishing laws.

Edwin Bolduan, Milwaukee, was fined $10 and costs when he pleaded guilty to a charge of operating a minnow seine in Dodge county waters. Herman Schab, Mayville, charged with using a dip net during a closed season, paid a fine of $20 and costs. Gilbert Bennett, Juneau, neglected the purchase of a license before using a rod and reel, and was fined $15 and costs.

R. Hamann, Milwaukee, charged with fishing with more than one line and hook without a resident fishing license, paid a fine of $15 plus costs. All men pleaded guilty.

Karrmann Heads Platteville Club

PLATTEVILLE — Robert Karrmann was elected president of the Platteville Country club this week. Other elected officers include Harry Cole, vice-president; Fred Johns, secretary-treasurer, and Dr. C. M. Schuldt, head of grounds committee. Mrs. Robert Engels was elected president of the ladies group of the club, Mrs. Robert Karrmann, secretary-treasurer, and Mrs. Glen McVay, social chairman.

Hilltops Favored in Quad Track Meet Saturday

MILWAUKEE — (U.P.) — Marquette University's track team will participate in a quadrangular meet at Stagg Field on the Chicago midway Saturday when it engages Illinois Tech, Chicago Navy Pier and the Milwaukee State Teachers College.

Marquette trounced Navy Pier in an indoor dual meet here last winter, 82-22, but since then the sailors have had a change in personnel and loom as tough opponents. There is no basis of comparison between Marquette and the other two schools.

Coach Melvin (Buster) Shimek appeared to be optimistic about his Hilltoppers' chances to win the meet, despite the fact that Marquette tracksters have bowed to Michigan State and Wisconsin in meets this spring.

Pacing the Marquette team will be Hurdler Art Egbert, out of competition for the past two weeks because of ill health. Other Hilltop standouts include Gil Larson in the sprints, Earl Jaeger in the 440-yard race, Carl Schuete in the javelin throw and Al Klug in the shotput.

Chokedamp Exists After Mine Air is Robbed of Oxygen

Yesterday I said a few words about mine gases, in connection with the use of canaries as a safety measure. A canary may be poisoned to a point where it falls from its perch, but oxygen can be used to bring it back to health.

In the same way it is possible, in many cases, to save the lives of miners after they have been overcome by gas. When the rescue is quick, the injured man is likely to be saved.

Coal mines hold the most danger for miners. Several kinds of gas may be found in them.

One coal mine gas is known as "firedamp." Another is "white damp," and a third is known as "chokedamp."

Firedamp is the most widespread of the gases. If present in the right amount, it can cause an explosion.

When a very small amount of firedamp is found in a mine, it is a warning, but does not cause an explosion. According to studies which have been made, the methane gas in the firedamp must be mixed with air to the extent of at least six parts to 94 parts of air before there will be an explosion.

That partly explains why miners dare to carry safety lamps into mines. The flame of such a lamp is shielded, but in addition there is this fact: Over the flame of the lamp, a violet blue "cap" is to be seen when there is as little as one-half part of methane to 99 and one-half parts of air. The "cap" provides an excellent warning.

When the methane gas in firedamp is mixed with air to the extent of more than 22 parts, it no longer is explosive. This is a strange fact, but has been learned by tests. The most explosive mixtures of methane are those in which there are eight to 14 parts of it in each 100 parts.

Chokedamp, also known as "blackdamp," brings a different kind of danger. It fills chambers in mines after the air has been robbed of oxygen.

What robs the air of its oxygen? Sometimes the oxygen is taken out—or "absorbed"—by the coal. In other cases the oxygen is "eaten up" during blasting in the mine.

A man cannot live in air which has lost its oxygen, and the chokedamp will suffocate a man who stays in it for a time. His only hope for life is through being revived and this may be done with the help of an oxygen mask.
