Marine Ace Appears Tonight on Cantor's Seasonal Finale

When Eddie Cantor presents his final broadcast of the season, to be heard over WIBA at 8 tonight, he will have among his guests Maj. Marion Carl, marine corps ace who has downed 18 Jap planes.

Vera Vague will be another guest on the show, which will be presented from El Toro marine corps air station near Santa Ana, Calif.

The entire company, including Dinah Shore, Harry von Zell, Bert Gordon, and Cookie Fairchild will entertain the marines.

Shortly after his final broadcast of the season, Cantor will travel to New York, stopping off enroute in Baltimore to christen the Liberty ship, George M. Cohan, on July 4.

Other features to be heard tonight:

Execute Traitor, Court Orders

CINCINNATI, O. —(U.P.)— The sixth U. S. circuit court of appeals on Tuesday affirmed the conviction of Max Stephan and ordered the district court at Detroit to proceed with execution of the traitor on July 2.

Stephan's execution — twice postponed by appeals to higher courts—will be carried out at the Milan correctional institute.

The U. S. supreme court refused three times to upset Stephan's conviction.

Stephan's last remaining hope was a commutation of sentence by Pres. Roosevelt.

Stephan was convicted of harboring Lieut. Hans Peter Krug, Nazi flyer who escaped from a Canadian prison camp.

U. S. to Send Planes for Australia's Use

CANBERRA — (U.P.) — Pres. Roosevelt has approved release of enough aircraft to increase the Australian air force by 60 per cent, Prime Minister John Curtin revealed to parliament Tuesday.

Sandals Plentiful, Shoe Men Declare

WASHINGTON —(U.P.)— Despite shoe rationing, children may wear summer sandals this year — with rubber soles, too—the shoe industry assured parents today.

There is a plentiful supply of the sandals on most dealers' shelves, L. E. Langston, New York, executive vice-president of the National Shoe Retailers assn. said today. He added that the wearing value of these shoes is just as great, and in some instances greater, than that of winter oxfords.

Sponge Takes Food Through Thousands of Small Mouths

TWO or three times during the past year, I have talked with a man or woman who supposed that the word "animal" should be used only for the furry animals known as mammals.

Actually the animal kingdom includes many types of living beings. A fish or a bird is just as truly an animal as a bear or a rabbit. Snakes, lizards and alligators also are animals.

Even the insects are classed as animals by scientists. So are many strange and lowly forms of life which live in the sea.

The sponge is not the lowest form of animal life, but it is one of the very low forms. It has no head or feet, and it stays in one place, as if it were a plant.

Yet the sponge is correctly called an animal. It eats and breathes, and certain parts of it keep up a strong motion in the water.

The sponge has no single large mouth through which to take food. Instead it has thousands of tiny "mouths." The tiny mouths are known as "pores," and water keeps passing into them.

The water is brought in through the motion of "flagella" or "whipping cells." Located about the sponge pores, these cells move back and forth, whipping the water at high speed.

In the water are tiny animals or plants which serve as food for the sponge. There is no special stomach, but the cells of the sponge take what food they can from the water which passes by. They also take oxygen from the water, and that is how they breathe.

A number of openings much larger than the pores exist in the sponge's body. These openings serve as "exits" for the water from which food and oxygen have been taken.

Sponges are fastened to the bottoms of seas and oceans in many parts of the world. They are most common in the tropics, but are found far to the north in the Atlantic and the Pacific.

There are many kinds of sponges. Some reach a height of no more than half an inch. Others grow until they are two or three feet high.

Sponges used for washing windows and other purposes of the kind belong to a special sponge family. Their skeletons, when dry, are soft and perhaps even silky.

Many kinds of sponges have hard skeletons, and among these is Venus's flower-basket. This glassy sponge is a native of waters around eastern Asia. In former times some travelers called its skeleton "the work of skilled Chinese carvers." Today we know that it is one of Nature's products.
