Wendell Willkie to Be Heard on WIBA Show Tonight at 7

Wendell Willkie will make his first appearance in an important radio drama in the air presentation of his own best-seller, "One World," to be heard at 7 tonight over WIBA.

The program is the second in the new Words at War series. During the program, Willkie will be heard three times as narrator. In the actual drama, the role of Willkie will be played by Thomas Chalmers, veteran radio actor, opera singer, and film commentator.

Uncle Ray's Corner

WEST-CENTRAL Mexico there is a state which contains most of the members of a certain tribe of Indians. They are known as "Tarascans" and we hear of them far back in the history of white men in the New World.

About 250,000 of the people of Mexico are classed as Tarascans. There are not nearly so many of them living today as there are Aztecs or Mayas.

In the time of Montezuma II, much of Mexico was under the power of the Aztecs. The Tarascans, however, kept their freedom.

Cortez and his Spanish soldiers conquered the Aztecs, but the Tarascans fought off the invaders. In later years their lands were taken over as part of the Spanish colony of Mexico, but they were not willing to be "good subjects." The spirit of revolt was in them.

Among the heroes of these Indians is a man known as a "warrior priest." His full name was Don Jose Maria Morelos y Pavon, but he commonly is spoken of as "Morelos."

In 1810 Morelos joined in an effort to win freedom from Spain. In the fighting which followed during the next five years, he proved himself an able leader. He was captured, however, by Spanish troops, and died before a firing squad.

In memory of Morelos a statue has been built on an island in a lake where Tarascans fish to this day. The statue is made up of concrete blocks, and it rises as high as a six-story building. The hero failed to live to see Mexico win freedom, but he is honored for the work he tried to do.

Several weeks ago I spoke of the "dance of the old men" which Tarascans perform during a service in honor of the dead. They also have other dances, and it is their custom to wear masks while they dance.

In the market place of a Tarascan town, "food for the dead" is sold. Cakes and colored candy are on display, and a person may buy one or more objects to take to a grave.

The candy or cake is placed on the grave at, or near, midnight. These simple folk no doubt expect the spirits to come back to the cemetery to enjoy something to eat. Flowers also are placed on the graves, and at times a piece of meat.
