Uncle Ray's Corner

YESTERDAY I spoke of the common idea that donkeys are stubborn and dull-witted. This seems to be true of some donkeys, perhaps because of bad treatment which owners have given them.

Yet many cases are on record in which donkeys have shown good sense.

In 1816 a British sea captain, Dundas by name, was sailing from Gibraltar to Malta with a donkey on board. His vessel, the "Ister," struck a sandbar off the Spanish coast, and the donkey was flung overboard.

Swimming several miles, the donkey reached shore, then traveled 200 miles westward. Several days later, a guard at the Gibraltar gates was amazed to see the same donkey which had been shipped to Malta! The donkey, we are told, walked through Gibraltar until he found the stable which he had left.

Another Englishman makes this report about a pet donkey:

"While living on the Sussex coast, I had a very fine donkey. He was the companion of my children in their rambles on the downs. When they took food with them, he seemed to feel that he had a right to share in it.

"The donkey would accept from the children's lunches apples, oranges, milk, cake and even tea. He would not, however, take ginger beer (that is, ginger ale). He had been struck on the nose by a cork from a ginger beer bottle, and he would quickly march off when such a bottle was taken from the lunch basket.

"The donkey lodged in a small, open shed with a small yard in front of it. He was not allowed to go into the nearby kitchen garden, but at night he would unlatch a gate and go into that garden.

"From my window one night I say him rear on his hind legs so he could move the high latch on the gate. He walked quietly into the garden and a few minutes later came back with a large bunch of carrots which he put in his shed."

On this continent and in South America there are donkeys known as "burros." They are descended from donkeys brought in from abroad.

Frank C. Hibben tells of an attack by sheep dogs against a number of burros which were carrying packs up Mount Goddard in California. He says that the burros fought off the dogs with their hoofs and teeth, killing two of them.

Sometimes, however, burros are on good terms with dogs. One burro won a name for himself by his habit of "kissing" a dog and other animals on the ranch each morning.
