AP Case Goes to High Court

WASHINGTON — (U.P.) — The supreme court Monday agreed to review thed ecision of a three-judge New York federal district court in the government's anti-trust suit against the Associated Press (AP).

In a brief notation on its order list, the court noted "probable jurisdiction" in the matter. Such a notation means that the court agrees to hear oral arguments and accept briefs on the case. The arguments are expected to be heard in the fall.

The Associated Press, in a direct appeal to the supreme court filed last month, contended that the New York court's judgment holding it guilty of violating the antitrust laws, would subject it to the supervision of the department of justice and the federal courts in such a manner as to be "wholly incompatible with freedom of the press."

The government, a few days later, filed a cross-appeal arguing that the judgment was too limited in scope to effectively prevent "continuance or renewal" of alleged anti-trust violations by the AP.

By a two to one decision, the district court on Jan. 13 enjoined AP from observing bylaws which permit members to consider the competitive position of an applicant for membership. The tribunal said, however, that AP might restrict applicants on othe grounds and ruled that if AP modified its bylaws to the court's satisfaction it might continue to provide a news report exclusively to members, to require members to furnish local news to AP exclusively, and to retain a contract with Canadian press.

The government's appeal urged that AP be enjoined perpetually from restricting new memberships irrespective of any modifications in its bylaws.

INDIAN BOYS BECOME YOUNG HUNTERS IN EASTERN PERU

One part of Peru is known as "the Montana." This name came from the Spanish language, and means "mountain land."

The Montana of Peru is on the eastern side of the Andes mountains. It slopes toward Brazil, and has rivers which join the great network of the Amazon.

To reach the Montana is a hard task, unless you go by airplane. When a traveler arrives there, however, he is rewarded by strange sights. If he can forget the mosquitoes and other pests, he may enjoy looking at the strange animals in the forests and jungles. He also may find it interesting to study the Indians.

There are tapirs in this part of Peru. With their small eyes and movable noses, tapirs look rather odd as they make their way through dense forests. They are harmless to people, but will fight and bite dogs if they are attacked.

Indians often kill tapirs so the flesh can be used for food. The hide makes good leather when it is tanned.

Some of the largest South American monkeys live in the forests and jungles of Peru. They belong to the group of "howlers" and are noted for the loud noises they make. Their food is made up chiefly of leaves and fruit, and if we can judge by their noises they must have trouble dividing up their meals! They have large voice-boxes, but little room in their heads for brains. They can make a big noise, but aren't smart.

Flying from tree to tree are bright-colored parrots, also the big-billed birds known as toucans. Spoonbills and cranes wade in the rivers and marshes.

Indians of eastern Peru live a rather wild life, though some of them plant gardens and raise livestock. A boy of 10 or 12 is seldom found in school. The custom is to train the children to earn a living at a tender age. The boys are taught to go out and hunt with spears, or with bows and arrows. An Indian boy may make a name for himself as a hunter by the time he is only 12 years old.

There are few very old persons in these tribes. If a man lives to the age of 40, he is classed among the "old people"!
