Lucas Urges Completion of Farm Machine Quota

WASHINGTON — (U.P.) — Sen. Scott W. Lucas (D.-Ill.), asserting that manufacturing quotas are useless unless they are met, urged the War Food Administration (WFA) Tuesday to "bring pressure" on the War Production Board to complete the farm machinery program.

Lucas made his plea at a senate agriculture subcommittee hearing on the farm machinery shortage. The subcommittee previously had heard testimony that actual farm machinery production was falling 20 to 60 per cent below WFA quotas.

Subcommittee Chairman Guy M. Gillette, (D.-Ia.), agreeing with Lucas, said it "seems there has been some dereliction of duty" in meeting the quotas.

WRITER WAS PROUD

In the year 1830, a steam fire engine was used in London, England, for the first time. This engine pumped water faster than hand pumps which had been used before that time.

London's success with the steam fire engine led some other cities to fight fires with power machines. Yet the progress was slow. In many places the old-fashioned hand pumps kept their places for a long time.

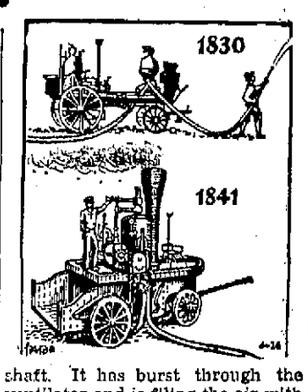
In an old magazine, dated January, 1891, I have found an article telling about the ways of fire fighting in the larger cities of that time. The writer was proud of the firemen. Here is the way he told about a fire which started in the basement of an office building:

"The policeman runs to the little red box set in a red lamp post. He opens a door and gives a hook a pull.

"A minute passes and then, away up the street, drawn by a galloping team, comes the first steam fire-engine.

"A tender with a roll of hose is close behind, and from another street a truck piled high with ladders swings in.

"Other engines reach the scene to find that the fire has gone roaring up the stairway and elevator shaft. It has burst through the ventilator and is filling the air with flame and sparks.



"As the front door is opened, the men are met by a gush of fire and smoke.

"Line after line of hose is laid. Stream after stream is directed into the basement. Ladders are reared and other streams are carried to the floor above.

"An iron pipe is raised 50 feet in the air. From the nozzle at the top of the pipe, water is hurled through windows of the highest floor."

The writer went on to tell that in a short time the fire was put out. He said that "the roaring furnace" became "a steaming, soggy mass."

Fire fighting of that kind went on well into the present century. The old steam fire engines used to send up clouds of smoke, as well as sparks, as they were pulled through the streets.

Many persons swarmed to look at those old-time fires, as they do nowadays. People like to watch fires—unless it happens that their own home or office building is burning!
