Loses Taste Sense

RUTH M. DONDERO

Her sense of taste lost in an auto accident, Ruth M. Dondero, 18, of Weymouth, Mass., is shown after she received a $4,500 out of court settlement from an insurance company. She was on a sidewalk when struck by a student driver.

SCOTT'S SCRAP BOOK By R. J. Scott

Uncle Ray's Corner

Portugal Produces Grapes, Oranges,, Olives, and Cork

NATURE has been kind to Portugal. The country has rich soil and a gentle climate. Crops grow well on the land. and fish are easy to take from the sea.

Some idea of the mild winters in Portugal may be gained from this fact: in a period of 20 years, snow fell on the city of Lisbon only three times. Lisbon was built on hills near the sea coast, and at its side is one of the great harbors of the world.

There are mountains in Portugal, to be sure, and the winters are not so mild where the land is high, but in general the country is almost tropical. Palm trees grow there, also orange trees. Hundreds of square miles are covered with olive trees. In an average year, the olives yield about 12,000,000 gallons of olive oil.

There is a large grape harvest each year, with thousands of tons of grapes being picked. The grape vines are grown on the sides of many hills.

In parts of Portugal, there is an old custom of pressing juice from grapes with the feet. Barefooted men walk on grapes which have been placed in a large stone vat. As they trample the grapes, they may sing an old folk-tune.

Another important product of Portugal is cork. Cork trees belong to the oak family, and their light bark is of value in many ways. They often reach an age of from 150 to 200 years. The best cork comes from strippings which take place after the trees are 50 or 60 years old. In some years, Portugal produces from 60,000 to 80,000 tons of cork.

Portugal is one of Europe's "little countries," but it has more than twice as much land as Switzerland, and almost twice as many people. The latest population figure for Portugal is 7,460,000.

During most of its history, Portugal has been a kingdom but it has been classed as a republic since 1910.

For a long time Portugal was a rival of Spain in a race for foreign trade and colonies. The Portuguese obtained only one colony in the New World, but it was a big one—Brazil. Among all South American countries, Brazil is the largest in area and population. No longer does it belong to Portugal, but the people still speak the Portuguese language.
