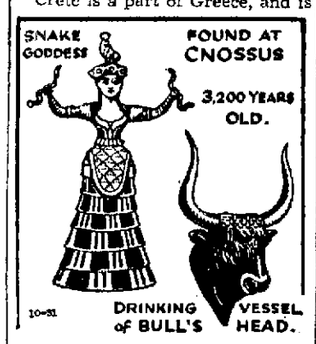
PEOPLE ON ANCIENT CRETE MADE STATUES OF "SNAKE GOODESS"

The island of Crete has an area of 3,200 square miles, which means that it has about three times as much land as the state of Rhode Island. There were 386,000 people on Crete at the time of the last census before the present war.

Crete is a part of Greece, and is the largest of the many islands near Greece. Old tales of the Greeks, said that Zeus, their greatest god, was born on the island.



In later centuries, the storytellers of Crete added something to the Greek myths. They said that Zeus had come back to the place of his birth, and had died and was buried there. According to the Greek idea, a god was a being who could not die, but times changed and the tale spread that Zeus was dead.

Other strange stories were told by Cretans long ago. One of these said that King minos received tablets from Zeus, with laws which the people should follow. We even hear about a "man of bronze" who walked around Crete three times each day. The truth may be that the "man of bronze" was a government officer who carried the laws of Minos on bronze tablets.

The modern capital of Crete is a city named Candia. Long ago, the capital was Cnossus, and it was there that the Palace of Minos was built.

Among the remains of Cnossus are stone sewers, which are in good condition to this day. They were laid down from 3,500 to 4,000 years ago.

Various objects have been taken from the Palace of Minos. Among these are small porcelain statues of a snake goddess and her helpers. The figures hold snakes in their hands. The art of "snake charming" perhaps goes back thousands of years.

Another object is the head of a bull which was carved out of soapstone. Rock crystal and jasper were used to form the eyes. The head is fitted with a pair of large horns, and is indeed lifelike.

There is a large hole in the bull's head, behind the horns, and this leads to the belief that it was used to hold liquid. Perhaps it was a vessel employed for meetings where sacrifice was given to gods or goddesses of Crete.
