Kids don't like what's good for them ...or DO they?

A message to parents about radio programs

One of radio's major problems has been to present programs that children themselves will like . . . and at the same time keep within the bounds of wholesome entertainment. The only thing that's easier than for a youngster to say, "That's corny" is for a parent to say, "That's trash!"

Before "House of Mystery" was born in January of 1945, its creators enlisted Dr. Robert L. Thorndike of the Department of Educational Psychology, Teachers College, Columbia University, to study entertainment preferences of boys and girls.

More than 3,000 youngsters were questioned on their preference in radio programs. Animal stories. Magic and fantasy. Love and romance. Success stories. Science and occupations. Every category was explored. In spite of all that teachers wish children would prefer—they named "mystery and detective" as their favorite radio entertainment.

The problem, then, was to give children their kind of entertainment . . . but to do it in a way that parents and teachers would consider wholesome and sane.

"House of Mystery" has worked it out. Children love it. Parents approve it. It is a program of stories that lead to legends, tales of haunted houses, witchcraft and werewolves—the kind of mystery that holds a fascination for youngsters. Yet it is the kind of mystery which loses its terrors as Roger Elliott brings his young listeners back to calm, everyday normality with logical and understandable explanations of these fancied terrors.

"House of Mystery" adds to the fund of learning as children hear of events in history, the geography of the world, and the customs of far-away places. It is sugar-coated teaching which has built an enthusiastic following.

The makers of Post's Corn Toasties invite you to gather the children together every Saturday. Listen to "House of Mystery" with them. Make it a date every week. You'll see why "House of Mystery" has become a real favorite with children and parents.
