Papers Win Praise For Bond Drive Aid

WASHINGTON — (U.P.) — Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau, Jr., has disclosed that newspaper support of the fifth war loan drive broke all previous records.

In a letter of congratulation and appreciation to Frank Tripp, chairman of the Allied Newspaper council, Morgenthau thanked the nation's newspapers for their unselfish support of the drive.

"In spite of the difficult paper shortages, newspapers gave greater advertising and editorial support to the fifth drive than any previous one," Morgenthau wrote. "We acknowledge with gratitude the splendid assistance of the Allied Newspaper council and your fellow publishers."

Tripp released treasury figures showing that daily and weekly newspapers combined carried a total of 203,014 advertisements during the fifth war loan drive, totaling 158,131,405 lines of space with a total dollar value of $10,160,709.66.

The previous record, set during the fourth war loan drive, was 159,878 advertisements, totaling 120,191,376 lines of space with a dollar value of $7,849,241.

In addition, Tripp reported that newspapers contributed 45,582,675 lines of news and editorial support of the fifth war loan drive, as compared to the previous record of 35,000,000 lines.

In setting the new record dailies published 108,968 advertisements, totaling 66,505,905 lines with a dollar value of $7,628,549.66, and contributed 26,153,925 lines of news and editorial support.

Weeklies published 96,046 advertisements totaling 88,625,000 lines with a dollar value of $2,532,160, and contributed 19,428,750 lines of news and editorial support.

The text of Morgenthau's letter:

"Will you please convey to the newspaper publishers of America my sincere appreciation for the outstanding contribution they have made to the success of the fifth war loan drive.

"In spite of difficult paper shortage, newspapers gave greater advertising and editorial support to the fifth drive than any previous one.

"The newspaper advertising performance has been truly outstanding, and I hope you will ask all publishers to express our thanks to the patriotic sponsors who have so unselfishly supported this vital war financing effort.

"Newspapers have every right to be proud of the part they are playing in this financing program—and the nation can be thankful for a free press, which is serving our country so well and unselfishly.

"We acknowledge with gratitude the splendid assistance of the Allied Newspaper council and your fellow publishers."

American Oyster Catcher Lets Rays of Sun Help Hatch Eggs

Judging by its name, we should expect the "oyster catcher" to feed mostly on oysters. The truth is that this bird eats other kinds of shellfish far more often than oysters. It likes clams, whelks, winkles, barnacles and limpets.

Now and then an oyster catcher may find an oyster on the beach at low tide, but it is not prepared to make raids on oyster beds well below the water. You will remember that most oysters live at depths of from 18 to 100 feet. A bird would need to be a very clever diver to get to an oyster bed at a depth of, say, 50 feet.

Yet this bird probably will keep its name for a long time. It has a strong, sharp bill which can force open the shell of a clam or oyster.

Europe has oyster catchers with red eyes and orange-colored bills. Many of them are seen along the sandy beaches of Great Britain and Ireland. Some nest in fields some little distance from the coast, but in that case they make regular trips to a beach to get food.

The oyster catchers of Europe have black and white plumage. The feathers on the wings and back are black, while the breast feathers are white.

Along the Atlantic coast of our continent are oyster catchers with much the same plumage as those of Europe, except for a few brownish feathers. They are from 15 to 20 inches long when full grown.

The "American oyster catcher" range from Nova Scotia down to Florida, and from Florida to Brazil. Their eyes are yellow.

Like most of their relatives, American oyster catchers usually make small holes in the sand to serve as nests. The female lays three clay-colored eggs, with dark brown spots on them. She sits on the nest at night, and on dull days. On bright days, however, she often leaves the nest and lets the rays of the sun warm the eggs for hatching.

On the Pacific coast of North America are "black oyster catchers." These have no white feathers, but their habits are much the same as those of other oyster catchers.

Almost every important sea coast has some oyster catchers. You may find them in Greenland and Iceland, also in Australia and New Zealand.
