Galileo, Leonardo and Giotto Were Among Great Florence Citizens

During the past summer there was much alarm about the city of Florence. Time and again the question was asked in newspapers, "Will Florence be destroyed before it is taken"

The worry was due to the fact that Florence is the center of art.

Located in northern Italy, it has some of the best Italian art treasures.

As it turned out, the Germans gave up the city before it suffered important damage. Travelers in time to come will be able to see the famous painting which have been on view there for hundreds of years.

Before the war, the people of Florence had six bridges to use in crossing the Arno river, which flows through the city. All these bridges except one were reported to have been destroyed by the Germans to halt the advance of the Allies.

The bridge which was left standing is known as the Ponte Vecchio, or "Old Bridge." There are buildings right out on this bridge.

The Ponte Vecchio was one of the most interesting sights I saw during my visit in Florence in 1937. When a person crosses it, he passes between lines of shops where leather goods and various trinkets are sold.

More than 2,000 years have passed since a village was started in the Florence area. It was known as Fiesole.

In later centuries, a new village was started, being called Florentia or Firenza. This village grew into a city during the Middle Ages, and became far larger than Fiesole. In the English language, it is known as Florence. The latest census gave Florence a population of 351,000. Fiesole today is a suburb of the big city, with a population of only 6,000.

For 250 years, Florence was the chief city in a small republic. The famous scientist, Galileo, spent years of his life there, and so did Leonardo da Vinci.

Among the other great men who lived in Florence was Giotto, a painter and architect. Giotto designed a beautiful bell tower known as the Campanile.
