Foley Forfeits Bail on Conduct Count

John J. Foley, 50, of 614 Clemons ave., forfeited $25 bail Wednesday when he failed to appear in superior court on a charge of disorderly conduct.

Foley was arrested Tuesday at a capitol square theater where a 17-year-old Madison boy reported to the manager that Foley had molested him, police said. The boy tricked Foley into following him to the rear of the theater, and then tripped him when he attempted to flee upon seeing the manager, police said.

County Accepts Nurse's Resignation

The Dane county board public health committee Monday night accepted "with regrets" the resignation of County Nurse Marian B. Bower.

The committee voted to ask the state board of health for aid in obtaining a successor for Miss Bower. A request from the University of Minnesota has been received, asking permission to place a student in the county employ for practical experience in public health nursing.

Barn Swallows Search For Insects During Easy, Circling Flight

Sometimes a farmer is startled when he opens a barn door. There suddenly come to his ears the whiz of wings. If he looks up quickly enough, he may catch sight of several barn swallows speeding out of the opening.

The fork-tailed birds known as barn swallows often build their nests on rafters in barns. A dozen pairs of them may nest in a single barn. There are times when they use the main doorway to pass in and out, but commonly they have other ways to do that. Barns almost always have small openings, of one kind or another, which can be used for entrance and exit.

Barn swallows are small birds, being a little larger than English sparrows. They are swift at flying, and can make much better speeds than any sparrow, but usually they "take it easy" in the air. They circle about, hardly flapping their wings.

Insects make up most of the food of barn swallows, and are caught on the wing. The capture may occur at a height of 200 or 300 feet, or the bird may find its prey while almost skimming the ground.

Men have kept track of certain barn swallows, and have found that they stayed in the air as much as 10 or 12 hours in a single day. The birds would grow very tired if they flapped their wings all that time, but they can keep up their flying because they do so much gliding and circling, thus saving their wing muscles.

Mud is employed by these swallows when they build their nests. If possible, they find clay mud, but otherwise they take what is around. They carry little pellets of mud to the chosen place, then press the mud together. Bits of grass, hay or straw are used to make the nest walls stronger, and line it with soft feathers.

From three to six eggs are laid in each nest. The eggs are white, spotted with brown, red and lavender.

Now and then a barn swallow family has a home under an eave of a house, instead of in a barn.

The walls of caves also supply ledges where some barn swallows build their nests.

If the supply of insects falls down, barn swallows look around for berries. When the season of both insects and berries passes, they turn southward. Leaving Canada and the United States, most of them go to South America. Some, however, spend the winter in Florida.
