Platteville Holds Annual Flower Show

PLATTEVILLE — The annual flower and garden show by the Platteville Garden club was held Saturday in the Community room of the Civic Memorial bldg., Platteville, and was pronounced by the judges as "above average standard." First and second prizes were awarded to a large number of entries in different classifications. No grand prize was awarded this year.

The judges, from Madison, were Mrs. Walter Dakin, president of the Wisconsin Federation of Garden clubs; H. J. Rahmblow, secretary of the Wisconsin State horiticulture society, Mrs. Sam Post; and Mrs. H. S. Bostock.

Over 250 visitors had registered by 4 p. m.

Dr. H. C. Culver is president of the Platteville club; the Rev. J. Wilson C. Emigholz was chairman of classifications and prizes.

Lipton in Kansas

Lieut. Samuel H. Lipton, former biochemical research specialist at the University of Wisconcin, is now stationed at the Great Bend, Kas. army air field, where he is a photo interpreter, camp officials announced Saturday. Lieut. Lipton had been stationed in Europe before reporting to that B-29 operational base of the Second AAF. A 1938 graduate of the Burlington, Wis. high school, he was graduated with a bachelor of science degree from the university before becoming a member of the staff.

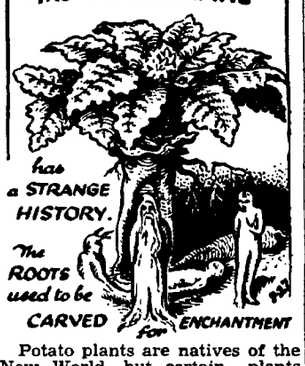
The MANDRAKE



Potato plants are natives of the New World, but certain plants which are related to them grow wild in the Old World. I am thinking of the mandrakes in southern Europe and northern Africa.

What a difference between a mandrake and a potato plant! The potato is good to eat, one of man's important foods. If you eat a mandrake, however, something will happen to you.

Taking a close look at mandrakes, we find that they are herbs, which grow only a few inches above the surface of the ground.

The white or purple flowers on a mandrake give way to berries of orange color. These berries are hardly fit to eat, but in past times they were used as medicine by people in several countries.

Yet neither the leaves nor the berries of a mandrake have much importance. It is the roots which brought fame to this plant. For 2,000 years, or more, people have talked about mandrake roots, and have told queer stories about them. Small figures have been carved from the roots.

The roots are about twice as long as the height of the plant above ground. Some of them are forked so they look like pairs of human legs.

The strange shape often found in the roots helped to give rise to the tales of mandrake magic. Another thing which did this was the noise heard when mandrakes were pulled up. When a mandrake root snaps in two while it is being pulled, it makes a sharp, crackling sound. This came to be known as the "shriek of the mandrake," and was supposed to be the plant's cry of pain. Some persons said that anyone hearing this noise would go mad.

When people ate mandrake roots, they grew sleepy as if from drugs. Ancient records tell us that the roots were used to keep the sick from feeling so much pain during operations. There is poison in the roots, and too much of it will cause death.

A custom arose in Europe of taking up the roots of a mandrake only at midnight. After the soil was loosened, a black dog was used to pull a rope fastened to the plant, and thus to get it out of the ground.

On this continent the May apple sometimes is called a mandrake, but it belongs to a different plant family.
