Uncle Ray's Corner

BROAD HOOFS HELP CAMELS CROSS DESERT SANDS

Animals differ widely in the speeds they can make. Among the slow-moving animals are turtles, and even slower are the snails, which carry their homes on their backs.

On the other hand, there are animals which can make running speeds above 30 miles an hour. They travel faster than the best track stars.

In speaking of speeds, it is well to remember that the question of distance is important. Some animals can go very fast for a short distance, but would fall behind in a long race.

A lion, for example, makes a quick rush, but lions never have won records in long-distance runs. Let one of them rush at a zebra from a short distance, and the zebra almost surely will be lost. In a mile race, on the other hand, a zebra would outrun a lion.

A man who is excellent in short-distance running may make 100 yards in 10 seconds. That is fast, but it hardly compares with the bounding run of the cheetah, which can travel 100 yards in three seconds. For a short distance, the cheetah ranks as the fastest-running animal in the world.

When it comes to long-distance running, dogs and rabbits are among the leaders. A greyhound or a whippet may run a quarter of a mile at the rate of 35 miles per hour. A jackrabbit, paced by an automobile, has been known to run a mile in one and a third minutes, or at the rate of 45 miles an hour.

Camels are less speedy than jackrabbits, but they have won fame for their running on the desert. They have great endurance, and in a long chase a camel could catch up to an Arabian horse.

The wide hoofs of camels help them while they are on the desert. Without these hoofs, their feet would sink too far into the sand.

In its jogging walk, a camel makes only two and a half miles an hour. While running, however, a fast camel can make 10 miles an hour or a bit more.

Some camels have traveled 100 miles in a single day. A load of 400 or 500 pounds usually is enough for a camel to carry, but sometimes one of these beasts carries a load of half a ton.
