Time Irks Movies' Prop Man

HOLLYWOOD — (U.P.) — Clocks and calendars, between them, furnish your motion picture property man with more worries than all the rest of the problems he must face during production of a picture.

It wasn't so bad a few years ago, before the theater-going public became "movie boner" conscious, but now a great many of the millions who attend the movies spend their time looking for a trivial error to write letters to the studio.

And most of the errors occur where clocks and calendars appear in scenes, the prop men say.

It wouldn't be so bad if the studios shot their films in continuity, but they don't and won't. Thus it is up to the prop man to make sure that when Pat O'Brien leaves the warden's office in "20,000 Years in Sing Sing" at 11:31 a. m., Oct. 29 to escort John Garfield to the admitting office he doesn't reach the latter place at 4:30 p. m. Nov. 12. If he does, he is sure to receive a deluge of letters couched in terms something like this:

"My goodness, what a big prison Sing Sing must be. It took O'Brien and Garfield exactly 14 days and five hours to walk from the warden's office to the admitting office."

A checkup will reveal that the two scenes were shot three weeks apart, but that does not relieve the prop man of his guilt. He is supposed to keep track of such things.

Because he is held responsible, the prop man usually keeps charts on time and dates which occur in a picture.

Even with these precautions, the prop man sometimes slips up in a picture in which eight or 10 or more dates and hours are "working," as they say in studio parlance. Perhaps that's why most prop men go around with a tired, sad look. They know that every minute of the day someone in some part of the world is trying to find a "boner" in their work.

The Drawers Return Without the Drawer

A desk stolen from the parked car of R. W. Roecker, 217 N. Murray st., Friday night was recovered by police Saturday night in the Illinois Central yards near N. Lake st.

The desk, partially filled with clothing, was taken while the car was parked in front of Roecker's home, police said.

Detective Herbert Spaeni recovered the desk after a small boy found it in the yards. Spaeni said one desk drawer was missing.

Defies Hitler

Vera Hruba

Beauteous Vera Hruba, Czechoslovak ice skating star, now performing in New York, defies Herrs Hitler, Goering and all Nazis in general and the German consul in New York in particular to make her stop dancing on ice to the tune of the Czechoslovak national anthem. When the German consulate ordered her to do just that, the un-anschlussed ice queen retorted: "Mr. German consul—not for one little minute can you tell me what to do. You my boss? Ha! Ha!"

Wyoming's Largest Tree Wins by Hair

DELTA, Colo. —(U.P.)— Arguments carried on last summer over the world's largest tree have assumed sectional aspects with the vindication of Wyoming—by .22 of an inch—in its claim to the biggest standing single timber in the Rocky mountain region.

Wyoming foresters made their boast on the strength of measurements of a pine in the Medicine Bow national forest 22 miles southwest of Saratoga. Three Olathe, Colo., citizens, indignant, asserted their state pride with a claim that a cottonwood near Dominguez in the Gunnison river canyon, was larger.

J. B. Seals, supervisor of the Uncompahgre national forest at Delta, trekked 22 miles northwest of his post, armed with measuring instruments. He came back with the information that the Colorado cottonwood was 19.68 feet in circumference at a spot 4½ feet from the ground.

WYOMING'S PRIDE TIMBER MEASURED 19.9 FEET, UPHOLDING THE STATE IN ITS CLAIM TO THE LARGEST TREE.

Regional Forester Allen S. Peck explained that the term "largest" is relative, depending upon whether the question involved is of size, height, girth or volume of wood content. He said the 4½ foot measurement is accepted as standard.

Both of the trees were reported to forestry headquarters at Washington for recording as famous trees.

ILLINOIS CENTRAL

Worthy of His Hire

Good pay for good work is a maxim on the Illinois Central System.

Railroad men provide a service that keeps the wheels of commerce turning—without it civilization would be crippled. For such service they deserve a reasonable wage. This applies alike to the section man spiking down a rail and to the engineer who pilots over that same rail a train with lives and property.

Out of the money earned by this service the railroad must pay all its bills, including wages. The latter item consumed 43 cents of every dollar the Illinois Central System took in last year.

It is on the efforts of workers that the railroad depends for earnings. They must provide a service that will win popularity and deserve equality under the laws governing competition. Their success in these respects will establish the prosperity of the railroad and of its employes.
