"Duffy's Tavern" Sets Grand Reopening For October 6

Comedy Skit To Share Honors With Fighting Marine And Famous Jury Trial Tuesday Night

Duffy's Tavern, the "poor man's Stork Club," with Ed Gardner in the starring role, returns to the air Tuesday, at 8:30 p. m over WJZ.

"Duffy's Tavern" was hailed last season as one of the outstanding new program developments of the year. The comedy show is the creation of Ed Gardner, former radio producer and writer, who plays the role of Archie, the harassed counterman in Duffy's place —"where the elite meet to eat."

The scene of the entire series is the Tavern, where Archie holds forth as counterman and manager. The characters include Miss Duffy, the boss' daughter; Eddie, the waiter; Finnegan, a constant but not so bright customer, and others who patronize the joint in spite of Archie's insults. Most of the time the manager is trying to improve the tone of the Tavern in hopes of drawing the carriage trade.

Pvt. Francis Pline, U. S Marines, a 1940 graduate of Father Edward Joseph Flanagan's famous Boys Town in Nebraska who has already seen considerable action in this war, is to be introduced on the air by Ginny Simms Tuesday at 8:00 p. m. over WEAF.

An accused cop-killer with a previous criminal record will be up before the Blue Network jury when the case of "The People Versus Mike Doran" takes to the air during "Famous Jury Trials," Tuesday at 9:00 p. m., EWT.

Mike Doran, an escaped convict, was captured suspiciously near the bodies of two recently murdered policemen. The law charged the fugitive with murder but, as Doran was unarmed when caught, the case was far from air-tight.

The defense proved that while Doran was being held at the local police station awaiting extradition for a previous crime, his jailers had allowed him to become a trusty and even a drinking companion.

Altho the original jury took three days to reach a decision the Blue web jury, despite sensational charges which will be batted back and forth, will reach their verdict during the broadcast.

Orson Welles Picture Has Top Rank At Sigma Theatre

Jean Arthur, Cary Grant Starred In Sensational Film Now Showing At Quilna

How wealth and power, built up thru three generations, crashes into oblivion under the blows of an advancing machine age is absorbingly pictured in "The Magificent Ambersons," a forceful drama of the 1885-1913, which commences Tuesday at the Sigma theatre. It is Orson Welles second film venture, only in this one he does not portray a dramatic role. The second film is "Isle of Missing Men," starring John Howard.

The efforts of an amateur secret-service agent to round up an enemy spy ring at night while he runs his band in the daytime, provide the hilarious basis of "My Favorite Spy," Kay Kyser's new vehicle at the State theatre. Rosalind Russell and Fred MacMurray are the stars of the co-featured, "Take a Letter, Darling," with Robert Benchley and Constance Moore in supporting roles.

"The Talk of the Town" is the current sensation at the Quilna theatre with Cary Grant, Jean Arthur and Ronald Colman in the starring roles. Grant is seen as a fugitive from justice, Colman as the candidate for the Supreme Court Bench and Miss Arthur as the warm-hearted young woman who shares their adventures.

Slugger Lou Gehrig is the role portrayed by Gary Cooper in the current Ohio film, "The Pride of the Yankees," a chronicle of the career of one of baseball's best-beloved characters. Teresa Wright and Walter Brennan portray prominent roles in the film, in which appear also Babe Ruth, Mark Koenig, Bill Dickey, and other Ruthian era team-mates.

Jack Benny's first film effort is re-named and offered at the Lyric theatre as "Keep 'Em Laughing," with the Boswell Sisters offering the vocal music, and Gene Raymond and Frank Parker in prominent roles. Also on tap "A Bedtime Story" starring Frederic March and Loretta Young.

Currently on view at the Drive In theatre is Tyrone Power's film, "Son of Fury," with "Confirm Or Deny" moving in Wednesday.

QUILNA

Perseverance is Jean Arthur's middle name.

Ever since, as an artist's model, she earned a screen test, Miss Arthur has charted a course designed to reach the top in her chosen profession, not merely as a movie star, but as an actress.

Her success is achieving that ambition is best proved by the top-flight pictures which have engaged her attention during the past five years. If any added proof were needed, her presence in the cast of "The Talk of the Town," which also headlines Cary Grant and Ronald Colman at the Quilna theatre, should be enough. It was Jean's first expressed desire, on arriving in Hollywood, that she began at the bottom, learning dramatic technique while hiding behind unimportant characterizations.

"Fortunately," she remembered, "my request was granted. My bosses had me lined up for a top feminine part in a big picture. I talked them out of it. Knowing nothing of motion picture technique and being definitely afraid of the camera, I knew that my chances for immediate success were infinitesimal. Moreover, after what I had heard about Hollywood I knew an initial flop would mean a permanent one."

She soon jumped from two-reelers into feature films as an ingenue.

That's why she quit the cinema capital. She couldn't escape saccharine roles. In desperation, she put her career in the balance, boarded a train for New York and asked for a job on the stage. She got the job and instant recognition as a superb actress.

Miss Arthur returned to become one of the top stars in the business, an actress the number of whose annual performances are governed only by her liking for parts proffered her.

Her perseverance is largely responsible for her present place in the cinema sun.

SIGMA

Orson Welles, whose magnificent production, "Citizen Kane," has been accepted as a milestone in motion picture progress, is before the public with his second adventure with camera and microphone. It is "The Magnificent Ambersons," Welles' version of the Booth Tarkington Pulitzer Prize novel, which opens Wednesday at the Sigma theatre.

With Joseph Cotten, Dolores Costello and Tim Holt in the top roles, the film tells a dramatic story of a twenty-year romance, laid against the picturesque background of a little mid-West town that grows into an industrial city.

What happens to the surviving members of the once-great Amberson family because they do not keep up with this growth, constitutes the substance of the story, which is primarily designed for entertainment; the picture fulfills this purpose admirably. Brilliant characterizations, remarkable atmosphere and a faithful reproduction of the American scene of its period (from 1885 to about 1913) are all absorbingly presented.

Briefly, the tale revolves about three persons — Eugene Morgan and Isabel Amberson who, tho always in love with each other, marry other mates; and George Minafer, Isabel's son, who becomes a spoiled young brat. Fate brings Eugene and Isabel together again years later and they seek to resume their old romance, only to have the arrogant George interfere and ruin everything. Herein is provided the searching drama of the plot.
