Typical Midwest Towns Arise in Australia

SOMEWHERE IN AUSTRALIA — (LP) — American troops have transferred northern Australian wastelands into many "towns" typical of midwestern United States.

American tented camps are mushrooming in the northern territory and are bringing communication lines which shrink the vast distances which formerly isolated this area.

This dispatch is being written from one of the "towns" where there is a midwest style postoffice operated by Cpls. R. A. Crocker, St. Charles, Minn., and H. L. Bonnel, Heron Lake, Minn. The postoffice sign reads "Los Angeles, 8,121 miles; New York, 14,275 miles."

The mayor of the town is Maj. H. R. Muller, San Antonio, Tex., and the town clerk is Capt. M. B. Vonwald, Redfield, S. D.

The post exchange is labeled "Big Chief Trading Post" and advertises "goods from the old country." Daily turnover is approximately $350, which would be the envy of many midwestern small town stores.

The town is electric lighted and fully policed with even traffic regulated. There are baseball and basketball leagues with the world series now being played between Minnesota and Texas, and South Dakota and Oklahoma.

Heliocopters May Become Flying Ambulances

CHICAGO — (LP) — Brig. Gen. David N. W. Grant, chief air surgeon of the army air force, said Tuesday experiments being conducted with heliocopters may lead to their use as "flying ambulances" to transport wounded from the front lines.

Grant, who has toured most of the major combat zones where American pilots are engaged, did not reveal where the experiments were being made with the machines which take-off almost vertically, and land within an area hardly larger than the craft itself.

In Chicago to attend the house of delegates meeting at the American Medical Assn. convention, Grant, in a press conference, said that the task of air force surgeons was to establish "old family doctor" relationships with the men so that pilots' potential hours of combat flying could be increased.

"The greatest problem pilots face is air fatigue," he said. "The surgeon, by personal observation, must know when to pull a man out of the air before he reaches the breaking point. If that is done, rehabilitation comes more quickly than in one who has passed the breaking point."

Teh government's conservation and somplification program in the manufacture of men's women's and children's hosiery is expected to save 14,800,000 pounds annually of cotton, rayon and wool yarns.

Luigi Gets Here, But as Prisoner

THORNTON, R. I. —(U.P.)— For several years Italian-born Vincenzo Gaudio and his wife sought to have their son Luigi come to the United States, but the youth was unable to because he was not a citizen.

Then came war and Luigi was called into the Italian air force and sent to Africa. The family believed him dead until they received a letter saying he was alive and well.

The letter came from Camp Carson, a prison camp at Colorado Springs, Colo.

Huron Indians, remnants of the tribe driven eastward by the Iroquois, have established at Ancienne Lorette near Quebec City, Quebec.

Mexican Girls Prove Sense of Balance in Hat Dance

IF YOU saw a young woman stepping on a man's hat, you might think she was careless about the feelings of the owner of the hat.

Yet there are men in Mexico who don't mind having their hats stepped on. They let young women dance on them!

The hats are of the wide-brimmed sombrero type. A man who owns a costly sombrero probably will not care to have it danced on, but he will lend one of his less fancy hats for the purpose.

A regular "hat dance" is carried on by the Mexicans. It is known as the "jarabe," and one of more couples dance around a hat. As part of the dance, a girl leaves her partner and steps on the hat. Then she proves her skill and sense of balance by dancing around the brim.

The jarabe was brought into Mexico from Spain, where it has been a popular dance for centuries. Some of the other dances of Mexico are native to the country. They were invented by Aztecs and other Indians who lived there before the coming of Cortez and his soldiers.

One native dance is performed at night, shortly before food is placed on the graves of the dead. Old men, or men who act as if they were old, take part in this dance.

Wearing serapes over their shoulders, the men make short, halting steps. Their backs are bent during the dance, as a sign of age.

The placing of food on graves goes back to an old idea that the dead need something to eat. This idea was followed by people of many countries in ancient times.

A strange cemetery exists at Guanajuato, a city in central Mexico. It has tomblike openings which are rented for burial for a certain period, usually four years. Later the remains of the dead are placed in deep pits.

That, however, is not the strangest part. Under the cemetery is a large tunnel which contains the mummies of scores of men and women. These mummies are in upright position, and stand in a long row along each side of the tunnel. Each mummy is covered with a sheet from the neck to the floor. The thin, dry air of Guanajuato is given credit for preserving the skin on the faces of the dead.
