The Fellowship of Prayer

Prepared
GAIUS GLENN ATKINS

CHOOSING A MIND: "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus." "Have the same attitude Christ Jesus had" (Goodspeed). Read Philippians 2:1-9.

If we are to be renewed in the spirit of our minds, we need a pattern. The wisest of us owe most of our minds to others. We have the mind of the astronomer for the stars, the mind of the geologist for the rocks, the mind of the historian for the past, and so on and on.

ATKINS

Our supreme need is a right mind about life and conduct and living with ourselves and other people—and God. For all this we have the mind of Jesus Christ. Ours to choose and make our own; ours in its tenderness; ours in its self-denials; ours in its vast, encompassing love; ours in our sharing of its divine wisdom. Christ-minded people are always the hope of any situation. Thomas Edison is said to have mourned the unused power of the waves of the seas. The supreme unused power for us humans is Christ-mindedness; to be had for the seeking.

Prayer: Almighty God, our ever-present help, forgive us that having so little wisdom of our own, we are so slow in trusting and following the wisdom of thy Son, Jesus Christ. May we wait before Him as little children asking to be taught and find in His spirit a healing for all our hurts. Amen.

A Little Saturday Talk: Leading Breeds of Sheep

A school pupil named Grace Berry tells me that she and her classmates and teacher would like "information about different types of sheep."

As I answer this letter, the first thing which comes to my mind is the word "Merino." Of all breeds of sheep, the Merino is by far the most common.

Spain is the place from which this breed spread over the world. During the Middle Ages there was a public officer in Spain who had the duty of looking over flocks of sheep. He was called "the Merino," and as time went on the name was given to Spanish sheep.

It may be that the Moors brought ancestors of Merino sheep into Spain from northern Africa. Even if this is the case, the breed did not grow famous for its fine wool until after the Spaniards had cared for the animals a long time.

Merino sheep were taken into South America hundreds of years ago. They have been important in North America for less than a century and a half, but about nine-tenths of the sheep on our continent today are at least partly of Merino stock. Many sheep called "Merinos" are far from being of pure breed.

In North America we have given special names to certain breeds of sheep with Merino ancesters. Thus we speak of "Vermont merinos and "Delaine merinos."

Most of the sheep in Australia and New Zealand are of Merino stock, but to a great extent they have been crossed with other breeds.

Merino sheep were taken to wool, but their flesh is not very good for meat. That is one reason why so few of them have been raised in Great Britain, where the people like to eat mutton, and want it to be of high grade. They obtain their mutton from such breeds of sheep as Shropshire, the Southdown and the Dorset Horn.

British breeds have been mixed with Merinos on this continent. Lincolns, Cotswolds and Dorset Horns are among the sheep from Great Britain which have been added to flocks in various places.

American sheep raisers say that some of their sheep produce better wool than the original Merinos of Spain.
