LYRIC

Sarah Bernhardt may have slept in a coffin but George Montgomery and Annabella found the accommodations provided by a 'wooden kimona' none too comfortable

During a sequence in the new action packed his 'Bomber's Moon ' now playing at the Lyric theatre, which co-stars Montgomery, and Annabella the script called for the two to hide in coffins in making good their escape from a Nazi concentration camp

Montgomery, the six-foot-two ex-Montana cowboy found difficulty in squeezing his huge bulk into the pine crate In fact, he later told Director Charles Fuhr that up until then he had thought sleeping in an upper berth was tough but now he realized an upper was a bit of paradise
