442nd Gets Silver Plaque From Texans

Because they effected the rescue of a Texas infantry battalion in France, Hawaiian soldiers of the 442nd infantry regiment recently were presented with a silver plaque.

News of the presentation was received here by County Judge Fred M. Evans and Atty. Ben Bull. The 442nd trained at Camp McCoy and was entertained in Madison by the American Legion and other groups before it was sent overseas.

The 1st battalion of the 141st Texas infantry presented the plaque to their Yank colleagues "with deep sincerity and utmost appreciation" for the 442nd's "gallant fight to effect our rescue after we had been isolated for seven days." The action took place in France, between Oct. 24-30, 1944. Presented in France, the plaque carires the slogan of the Texans, "Remember the Alamo" and that of the Hawaiian national guard, "Go for Broke."

The 442nd, veterans of fighting in Italy, now is in southern France with Lieut. Gen. Alexander Patch's Seventh army.

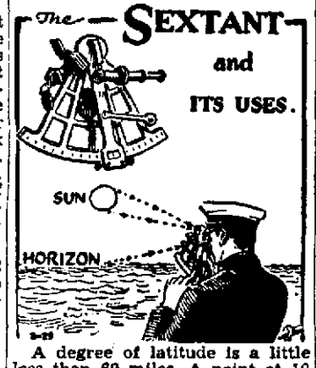
SEXTANT HELPS MARINERS TO LEARN LATITUDES REACHED BY VESSELS

Thanks to a knowledge of "latitude" and "longitude," ocean vessels are able to reach thousands of seaports and small islands.

Some persons mix up latitude and longitude, but we may keep them apart in our minds if we try.

Latitude shows the distance from the equator. A place may be 40 degrees north of the equator, making it "40 degrees north latitude." If it is the same distance south of the equator, it will be "40 degrees south latitude."



A degree of latitude is a little less than 69 miles. A point at 10 degrees north latitude is 687 miles north of the equator. Near the North and South poles, a degree of latitude is a bit longer than elsewhere, but the difference is hardly worth talking about.

An instrument called a "sextant" is very useful on the ocean. It tells the captain what latitude he has reached.

The sextant is of small size and has a triangle shape. In it there is a spy-glass or tiny telescope, and a darkened glass or shade to shield the eye from the glare of the sun. By looking at the sun, and adjusting the instrument to the horizon, a person can find the "altitude" of the sun. Often this is done at noon.

With the help of a book of tables and dates, the operator can learn at what degree of latitude he is when the sun is at that altitude. At night, a star is used instead of the sun to learn the latitude.

Longitude is the distance east or west of a certain line. That line runs from the North pole to the South pole, and through Greenwich, a suburb of London, England. Greenwich is at "zero longitude."

Other lines of longitude also run from one pole to the other. The lines are close together in the frigid zones, and are wide apart at the equator. At the equator a degree of longitude is 69 and two-thirds miles. At the North pole, on the other hand, the lines run together.

The prbolem of finding the longitude of a vessel on the ocean is different than finding the latitude. In one system, the position of the moon at a given time is used to discover the longitude.
