Society to Sponsor Pot-luck Supper

The Holy Name society of Holy Redeemer Catholic church will sponsor a pot-luck supper Thursday at 6:30 p. m. in the church parlors for members, wives and friends.

Uncle Ray's Corner

Hadrian's Wall Joined Line of Roman Forts

Hadrian, the Roman emperor, liked to travel. For this reason, he made long journeys from one part of his empire to another.

One place he visited was an island which was called, at that time, "Britain," and which now goes by the name of Great Britain. The Romans had conquered the half-wild people in the southern two-thirds of the island.

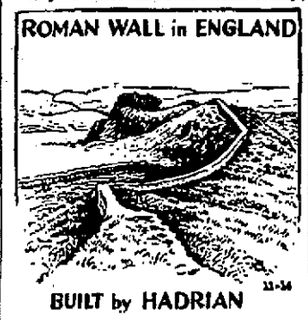
At the time of Hadrian's visit, there were Roman soldiers in southern and central parts of Britain. The natives seldom fought with these soldiers, but tribes in the north never had fallen under Roman rule. These tribes often made raids against the lands held by the Romans.

Learning about this trouble, Hadrian ordered a line of forts to be built across the island. The forts ran from the Tyne river to the Solway. A few years later they were joined by a wall.

The wall is known as "Hadrian's Wall." In later years it was made stronger by the emperor Severus.

If you visit Great Britain today,

ROMAN WALL in ENGLAND



BUILT by HADRIAN

you may find many parts of Hadrian's Wall. Other parts were torn down during the course of 18 centuries. Thousands of tons of stone were taken from it to build churches and houses.

Although a great deal of the wall has been destroyed, careful study has been given to the remains, and we know fairly closely what it was like when it was built.

The wall was made of concrete, with stone blocks on the top and sides. It was eight feet thick, and certain parts of it are believed to have been 19 or 20 feet high. The general height, however, was only from eight to 10 feet.

The length of Hadrian's Wall was 73 and one-fourth miles. A part of the wall was near the present border of England and Scotland, but the important English county of Northumberland lies north of it.

Fourteen large forts were placed along the line of the wall. Also there were 80 small forts, known as "mile castles," and 160 watch towers. A wide ditch was dug along the northern side.
