Notes for You . .

By WILLIAM L. DOUDNA

AT THE UNION: Paul Robeson went for the international scene in a big way at the Wisconsin Union theater Wednesday night, and his capacity audience of 1,300 went for him in an equally big way. The great bass-baritone's program included songs of England, France, Russia, the United States, Spain, and China, and it served to emphasize his love for the common man, his affinity for folk music, and his remarkably clear enunciation even more than his magnificent voice.

Robeson will repeat his concert at 8 p. m. Friday for a second sell-out house.

He opened his program with a group of old English and French songs, singing them with a quiet grace or a quiet humor, as occasion demanded. His "Dans le Printemps de Mes Annees" had a sweet tenderness in contrast to the rollicking "Three Poor Mariners."

For encores, he moved to the rich "Lasciatemi Morire" of Monteverdi and an aria from "The Magic Flute."

In Russian, Robeson sang Moussorgsky's "Silent Room" with haunting sadness and the prayer from "Boris Godounoff" with solemn dignity. Then he turned to a pair of Shakespearean songs and two melodies from Republican Spain—"The Peat Bog Soldiers" and "The Four Insurgent Generals." To ease the tension of these, he offered "Ezekiel Saw de Wheel" and "Joshua Fit de Battle of Jericho" —with harmony by his accompanist, Lawrence Brown—and the favorite "No, John, No," with happy humor.

Well, one could go on and on, for there was nothing that should escape mention.

Of course, there were 'Ol' Man River" and "Water Boy," which nobody can sing like Robeson. And there were the funny but almost forgotten "I Still Suits Me," the stirring Russian "From Border Unto Border," a lovely Chinese lullaby, and the stirring American song about "Joe Hill," whom the copper barons shot.

After all these musical encores (there were 15!) the indefatigable giant gave us a reading of the death scene from "Othello," which was almost as stirring here as in the play. Incidentally, Uta Hagen, who was his Desdemona in the play, was in the audience this time.

Assisting artist was William Schatzkamer, pianist, whom the insatiable audience called back for four encores. Most people seemed to like him immensely.

But I must say, in this small voice, that I didn't.

He played De Falla and Debussy with the same intensity, which shouldn't happen. His Brahms intermezzi, however, were well done.

* * *

SIDELINES: Robeson's earcupping, which he explained as "something I picked up in Hollywood," was designed to help his intonation, check his tone quality. He used an amplification system, too.

In "Ol' Man River," he altered the lines a bit. For "tired o' livin' and feard o' dyin'," he used "I must keep fightin' until I'm dyin'."

During his Madison stay, Robeson is the house guest of Prof. and Mrs. Oskar Hagen.
