Discs of The Day

(Reviewed by Bill Doudna)

Dvorak: "Slavonic Dances," recorded by the Cleveland orchestra under George Szell (Columbia) . . . Five dances arranged by the conductor. Lively colorful.

Gershwin: "An American in Paris," recorded by Leonard Bernstein and the RCA Victor Symphony orchestra (Victor) . . . A gay, spontaneous performance of a work which succeeds in picturing accurately not only the spirit of traditional Paris but the hail - fellow - well-met atmosphere of the '20s. The jazz rhythms get particularly apt handling.

Koussevitsky

Prokofieff: "Classical Symphony," recorded by the Boston Symphony orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky (Victor) . . . One of the most popular of contemporary works, this gets a fresh, energetic treatment here, backed by a rich tone. The symphony takes three sides; the fourth holds "Danse Finale" from Prokofieff's ballet, "Chout," which you'll like for the same reasons.
