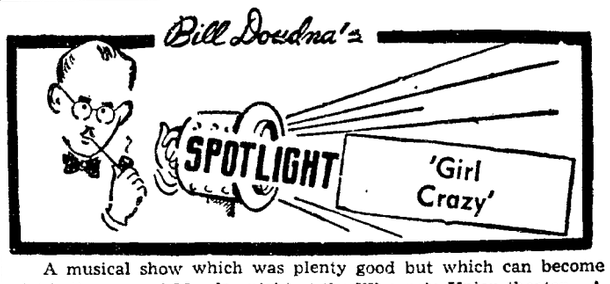
West high: For adults only, 7 to 9:45 p. m.



A musical show which was plenty good but which can become a lot better opened Monday night at the Wisconsin Union theater. A capacity audience of nearly 1,300 persons saw Wisconsin Players' version of George and Ira Gershwin's "Girl Crazy," and similar crowds will see it at 8 p. m. daily through Saturday and at 2:30 p. m. Saturday.

Ruthanne Mescar, James Brandon, and Edwin Morgan made the most of the comedy in the book as revamped by J. Helen Stanley to bring it up-to-date, a stunt she did without too much corn, and cleanly.

Miss Mescar displayed remarkable talent as a man-chasing comedienne, making every line count and hurling herself through the action with terrific velocity. Morgan played a Russian-accented cab driver—Miss Mescar's target—with an equal regard for lines and for the virtues of mugging.

Brandon was the small-time, girl-mad gambler, and likewise played it to the hilt. In every phase but one, he was topnotch—but his speaking voice sounded like he was imitating Bob Snively imitating Vittor Moore.

Add to the credit side of the ledger Mel Corbly's dancing; Gloria Bennett's singing of "But Not for Me;" a comedy dance by Nancy Roberts and Skeet Guenther; some nice choral singing; Miss Mescar's and Brandon's delivery of comedy songs; Nancy Smith's piano solo and Yaron Nathonson's self-accompanied song; comedy bits by Jay Marker and Milton Kaplan; all the dance numbers, and the splendid costuming.

Most of the debits can be wiped out during the week, the slow pace of the first act, which appeared all the more laggard in contrast with the speed of the second; the unaccountable dragging of "Embraceable You"; the sometimes sluggish movements of the chorus to and from the stage.

Others we'll have to take—the miscasting of Constance Crosby which made her sing "blues"; the bareness of the sets when the stage wasn't filled with people, and the absence (with exceptions noted above) of good singing.

But don't get the idea that, as a whole, it's anything but good fun. It's a prodigious undertaking for a student cast, and the overall result is satisfying.
