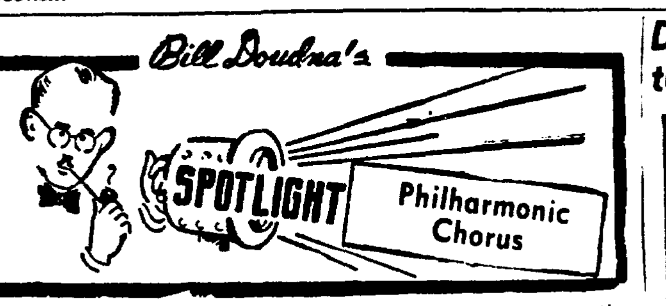
Bill Doudna's Spotlight



The Philharmonic chorus of Madison sang for the last time under Bjornar Bergethon at West high school Friday night, and it gave him the kind of response that resulted in the best concert of its three-year career.

Sharing the audience's acclamation wit hthe conductor and chorus were Prof. Oskar Hagen of the University of Wisconsin and the organization's accompanists, Julia Benoy Landmark and Margaret Otterson.

Hagen was applauded loudly for his "Three Carducciana," sung for the first time anywhere, and the accompanists especially for their work in Dello Joio's "A Jubilant Song."

Hagen's work was a setting for thre poems—poems in which sadness or tragedy touch joy.

The first was a lyrical "May Song," with a touch of the madrigal spirit; the second, an "Evening Greeting," and the third, a "Morning Greeting."

The second was by far the most appealing, with music easy to follow despite the Italian lyrics; one couplet, "The Earth seems a dark chamber where, at last, all human suffering falls asleep," was a poignant piece of writing.

Modern in general, Hagen's music often found itself resolving unusual harmonies into perfectly familiar ones.

The chorus sang with a freedom which had been lacking in some of its earlier programs; there was a fluency to music, an expression of the members' love of singing, and a confidence (well merited) in Bergethon's conducting which left the men and women singing easily, with neither self-consciousness nor tautness.

Dello Joio's song was the audience's favorite, and a good choice it was. Its exciting rhythmic patterns, its surprising accents, and its rousing accompaniment made it difficult to sing, but wonderful to hear.

Sixteen Philharmonic members sang Brahms' "Liebeslieder" with a lilt and a capital tone, with the tenors shining particularly in the second of the 10.

To be commended, too, were solos in other numbers.

For the first time, the chorus used a "shell" on the stage, and it was a firstrate idea, adding to the solidity of the singing.

After the concert, a reception was held at the Park hotel for Dr. and Mrs. Bergethon, who will leave Madison for New York this summer.

K. C. CHORUS: The Stitzen ensemble of Madison will assist the Knights of Columbus chorus in its concert at 8 p. m. Sunday in the Catholic Community center. The group will play between the two parts of the chorus' program.

The liturgical music in the first half will include "Ave Verum Corpus," Mozart; "Agnus Dei," Schweitzer; "Tenebrae Factae Sunt," Casciolini; "Exaudi Domine," composer unknown; "Adoramus Te Christe," Palestrina; "Jesu Dulcis Memoria," Kothe; "Ave Maria," Verdussen; "Improperium," Dress, and "Jubilate Deo," Wilkens.

The second part, composed of glee club selections, will include "The Bells of St. Mary's" "Winter Song," "Brother Sing On," "Now the Day Is Over,' and "Beautiful Savior."

Robert L. Woollen is director.

CHORAL MUSIC: The chorus of the University of Wisconsin's extension center at Racine will take over the University Concert band broadast periods this week. The chorus is direted by Ralph Houghton. Frank Thiery, Racine, will be intermission speaker. The program will be aired by WIBA at 5:15 p. m. Sunday.
