TIP O' THE MORNING: Plenty of Hollywoodsmen think that Johnny Carson will go far as a comedian. He's on Los Angeles' KNXT.

* * *

JACK GAVER of the United Press writes from New York:

The name of Rosalind Russell's leading man in the forthcoming musical, "Wonderful Town," is George Gaynes, which is brand new although its possessor isn't.

Both his native Helsinki, Finland, and Broadway used to know the performer as George Jongeyans, a straping blond with a singing voice of classical calibre. He first showed up on the stage here in the original production of "The Consul," playing a man twice his own age.

His next show was Cole Porter's "Out of This World," and by that time he was begining to worry about the inability of most persons to cope with his last name. First he tried the name Jon Geyans, but that wasn't too much of an improvement. The change to George Gaynes was made when director George Abbott got hold of him in "Wonderful Town."

Rex Harrison and Lilli Palmer will be making their third American stage venture as a team of married stars when they open Thursday night at the Shubert theater in "The Love of Four colonels."

Before Miss Palmer became a star, they were together in the same play in London, "No Time for Comedy," but did not work opposite each other.

They first appeared together here in the two leads of "Bell, Book, and Candle," a highly successful effort by John Van Druten two seasons back. Last season they were seen less auspiciously in Christopher Fry's "Venus Observed."

To theategoers who wonder if they intend to work together for the rest of their careers, a la Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontaine, the Harrisons report that they prefer dual assignments because they get a lot of fun out of working together, but they are not committed to any such rigid pattern. If a good item comes along that provides a role for only one of them, it won't be rejected.

"The Love of Four Colonels" is a big London hit by the actor-author, Peter Ustinov.

A new comedy by Mary Orr and her husband, Reginald Denham, will open at the 48th Street theater Wednesday. Its title is "Be Your Age"; Conrad Nagel and Loring Smith are in the top roles.

Red Cross Names Five to Committee

Five new members of the executive committee of the Dane county Red Cross chapter were elected Tuesday afternoon at a meeting of the chapter board of directors.

They are Mrs. Gertrude Anderson, Mrs. Vern S. Bell, Mrs. Conrad A. Elvehjem, Sidney L. Goldstine, and William S. Hobbins.

The board unanimously approved the executive committee' appointment of George Hibner, former director of the Madison regional blood center, as exeautive director of the Dane county chapter.

Hibner was appointed to succeed Edgar A. Spees, who died Dec. 20.

Robert H. Anderson, manager of Madison's Sears Roebuck store and chairman of the chapter, paid tribute to Spees for his many contributions to the Red Cross Movement and "to those of us who were fortunate enough to have known him."
