GETTING AHEAD: Geraldine Page, Broadway actress, believes that the time will come when dramatic training is as essential to an actor or actress as medical school is to a doctor.

"The competition is getting tougher, the standards of acting are higher, and the soda fountain-stool discoveries are fewer," she said in a California interview. "This is the day of the professional. Theatrical producers expect it, movie producers expect it, and so does the public."

On the stage it has almost always been the case, Miss Page pointed out, that every actor comes looking for a career with dramatic training behind him. "But until recently, the movies were just looking for types or personalities, and figured that they'd learn to act later."

Miss Page, who was beckoned from her Broadway hit in "Mid-Summer" to become John Wayne's leading lady in "Hondo," forthcoming Wayne-Fellows 3-D production for Warner Bros., has plenty of training and experience in her background.

After three academic years at the Goodman theater in Chicago, Miss Page went on to appear in every kind of repertory and summer stock outfit that exists. She did as many as six different plays and characters each week for 10 weeks. She worked in outdoor theaters and in barns, on river boats, and everywhere but on Broadway until a couple of years ago.

What's more, the actress believes, training shouldn't end with success. Even teachers go on taking post-graduate courses, doctors continue to study, naval officers go to new training schools.

"I'll give up studying acting when I give up acting," says Geraldine with finality.

Columbus Play Set Tonight, Wednesday

JACOBY ON BRIDGE

By Oswald Jacoby

There's a standard way of playing cards in the sort of hand shown today. When the hand was actually played, South didn't know this standard method, and he lost his vulnerable game as a result.

West opened the queen of diamonds, and South won with the ace. He drew three rounds of trumps and then returned to the diamonds.

He discovered that West was bound to win two diamond tricks, and a spade pushed through dummy's king gave the defenders two spade tricks. Down one.

South said that he was unlucky that the diamonds were 4-1. He was right. He said that it took more than a bad diamond break to beat him: for he would have made his contract if the ace of spades had been favorably placed. He was right again. But he was wrong in the way he had played the hand, for he should have made his contract despite both of the bad breaks.

South made his mistake when he drew three rounds of trumps. If the diamonds break normally, a second high diamond can be cashed safely even before the trumps are drawn. If the diamonds break badly, it is important to leave some trumps in dummy to cope with the situation.

The right line of play is to win the first trick with the ace of diamonds and then to lead only one trump—to dummy's king. A small diamond is then returned towards South's hand. If the suit breaks normally, South will take the king of diamonds, give up a diamond, draw trumps, and take at least 10 tricks.

When the low diamond is led from dummy, East may either ruff or discard.

If East ruffs and returns a club, South wins, draws one more trump with the queen, and then cashes the king of diamonds. This gets by safely, and South can ruff a low diamond with dummy's jack to set up his last diamond. The rest is easy.

If East discards when the low diamond is led from dummy, South wins with the king of diamonds and gives up a diamond. He can easily regain the lead, ruff a diamond with dummy's jack of hearts, and take 10 easy tricks.

City to Don Christmas Attire Next Week

Madison will swing officially into the Christmas season next week when the Capitol square and the first three blocks of State st. receive their annual mantles of street decorations the Madison Chamber of Commerce and Foundation (CCF) revealed Monday afternoon.

The CCF said a La Crosse firm has again been awarded the contract to erect the decorations, and the necessary electrical work will be done by a Madison contractor.

It is expected the decorations will be up and in working order the day after Thanksgiving, the CCF said.

The decorations are paid for by the merchants whose businesses adjoin the streets, and if funds permit, special decorations will be added to the four corners of the square.
