Understanding CHILDREN

By ANGELO PATRI

The books children carry home to and from school and use day after day ought to mean more to them than they do now. If they could own them at the close of a term, take them home and keep them always I believe they would mean more to them and do more for them than now when they are owned by the school system itself.

One sees schoolboys and girls tossing their books about, using them for a hop scotch game, or as weapons in sham battles, to the great detriment of the books. Children are much like their elders in this attitude. What belongs to the government belongs to nobody in particular, so away with it. Once I saw every lamp post along a parkside bearing a smashed globe but the windows of the houses opposite the park bore no signs of damage. So it is with the school books. "They don't belong to me, so what."

So a lot. If the books belonged to the pupil, he would have some pride of ownership. That helps build self-confidence and assurance. Owning something means a lot. But beyond that there is something even more desirable about owning one's school books. Just having them ranged along a shelf is prideful. Then, as time passed and school days are over, the books stand for very pleasant memories—we hope. And they can be taken down and read and re-read. New meaning and new importance is added to them now, when life's experiences have ripened intelligence and sharpened facts. They can be used as reference books. Many a young person whose school days are behind him finds need for such references. Many, too, find great pleasure in re-reading a book they had used in class, always finding new values in it. Such ownership has, before now, sent young people back to school to complete an education they once had scorned.

How are the children to own their books? The only way at present is for their parents to buy the books for them. These books are not too costly, especially if the school buys them at the parents request. They will pay for themselves over and over, once they become the property of the children.

Boards of Education always are short of funds. They cannot give the school children the books they use. Those must be used again and again by many children, as long as they last. Indeed some are made to last too long. But there are few parents in this country who cannot afford to buy the books their children use in elementary schools. The pupils in the secondary schools, given the habit, will find ways to buy theirs.

By OSWALD JACOBY

The average experienced player is used to the main idea of the holdup play. You usually hold up an ace in the suit opened by the enemy against your no-trump contract that is, you don't take the first trick, and sometimes you don't take the second.

The principle is much the same in today's hand except that the holdup must be employed even though declarer has two sure tricks in the enemy's suit.

West opens the four of spades against South's normal contract of three no-trump, and South allows East to win the first trick with the jack of spades. East now switches to the queen of hearts and South must once more refuse the trick even though he has two sure winners in the suit.

It is now impossible for the defenders to defeat the contract. It doesn't matter whether East continues with his own heart suit or switches back to his partner's spades. In either case, declarer wins and gives up a club. The opponent who wins can neither run his own suit nor establish his partner's suit. South can therefore knock out the other top club and take his nine tricks in complete safety.

Notice the difference if South wins the first spade. When South leads clubs, East wins with the ace of clubs and leads his other spade. This enables West to establish the spades. West will get in with the king of clubs in time to defeat the contract with the rest of the spades.

It would be equally fatal for South to refuse the first spade but take the first heart. West would then win the first club with the king and lead his other heart. East would establish his hearts and would get in with the ace of clubs in time to defeat the contract with the good hearts.

Advice on Your HEALTH

By HERMAN N. BUNDESEN, M.D.

An Air Force study has confirmed the results of earlier tests which showed that the use of piperazine preparations is effective in treating pinworm infection. This is important to you parents because pinworms infect about 45 per cent of school age children—and sometimes entire families.

Can Cause Insomnia

Pinworms live in the upper part of the large intestine and occasionally are found in the female genital organs. Very rarely are they found in the nose and the ears. These small white worms cause intense itching around the rectum and frequently in the nose. Restlessness and insomnia can sometimes be blamed on pinworms too.

The Air Force tests were conducted by Lt. Virgil M. Howie at Langley Field. Over a ten-day period, fifty-eight pinworm victims—whose ages ranged from 11 months to 33 years—were given piperazine. The drug was taken in liquid form in equal doses two or three times a day.

Tests Are Successful

The test proved the drug to be 84 per cent effective. Dr. Howie reports in a recent issue of the American Journal of Diseases of Children, failing in only nine cases. Five patients showed what appeared to be toxic symptoms while taking the preparation. These symptoms disappeared, however, when the treatment was stopped.

General Treatment

General treatment of pinworm consists of frequent enemas of soap and water or salt and water to wash the invested regions. Also keep your child's fingernails short. Pinworms frequently get under the nails and can be carried to his mouth or nose. Make him wash his hands thoroughly before eating and after going to the toilet. Have him sleep in cotton underpants and cotton gloves.

QUESTION AND ANSWER

F. T. R.: What is meant by a "pilonidal cyst?" Is it cancerous?

Answer: This is a condition often present at birth which occurs at the end of the spine. At first there may be a small swelling like a boil, which eventually breaks and drains, but leaves the area very sensitive.

However, the infection does not heal like a boil, but keeps recurring. Operation is the only means of treatment.

The condition is not cancerous.
