'Mama' Wood Talks Norwegian

WHEN Brooklyn-born Peggy Wood, star of the "Mama" series, recently was awarded the Royal St. Olav Medal of Norway (on direction of King Haakon VII) for fostering American-Norwegian cultural relations in her TV role (WTOP-TV, Fridays, 8 p. m.) she surprised everyone at the ceremony by speaking Norwegian.

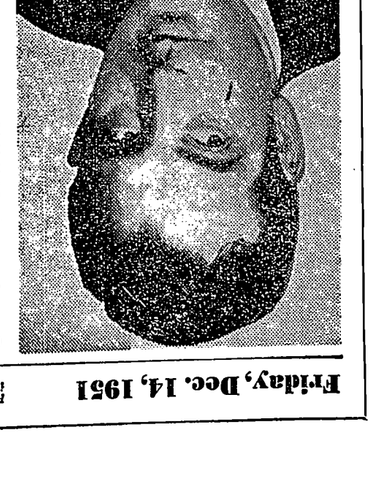
"Mama" is a gentle comedy about a Norwegian family named Hanson living in San Francisco, about 1910. The series started July 1, 1949 with Peggy Wood in the title role, and she has acquired an interest in matters Norwegian. Miss Wood is married to William H. Walling, New York printing firm executive, who has two grown daughters by a former marriage, and two granddaughters. Miss Wood, widow of Poet John V. A. Weaver, has a grandchild, daughter of her son, David Weaver.

Miss Wood's autobiography, "How Young You Look" was published a few years ago. Born February 9, 1892. Peggy was a steady patron of the opera from the time she was four. She studied voice under Arthur Van der Line and Emma Calve and made her Broadway debut in the chorus of "Naughty Marietta" in 1910.

In 1925, a year after her marriage to Poet John Weaver, she was featured in "Candida." She played with John Drew in a revival of "Trelawney of the Wells," with George Arliss in "The Merchant of Venice" and has been in Noel Coward's "Bittersweet" and "Blithe Spirit."

Miss Wood's theatrical background fills two full columns in "Who's Who in the Theatre."

Her literary career started with a diary she kept during the tour of "Trelawney of the Wells." The diary developed into "The Splendid Gypsy," first in the Saturday Evening Post, later as a book. In 1930 she wrote "Actors and People," followed by the novel "Star Wagon," in 1936. "How Young You Look: Memoirs of a Middle-sized Actress" appeared on the same day that "Blithe Spirit" opened.



John Payne will co-star with Coleen Gray Friday night at 9 on WTOP-TV in "Kit," a David Shaw play
