IF YOU'RE in the market for real low, corny comedy, something I have a deplorable weakness for, a couple of programs will supply it for show, the other the Ben Blue show (intermittently on the Colgate Comedy Hour). The new Murray show emanates from a replica of Hollywood and Vine and is not much different from the old Murray show except that it is only a half hour instead of an hour. Comedians and dancers and occasionally small animals wander in unexpectedly from the wings and go into their antics without any clear provocation. The sketches. such as they are. drift along in a rudderless way as if the actors were making them up on the spot. tainment is not anything that will stir up controversy in critical circles. Murray harbors the theory that what was good enough for your father is good enough for you and just possibly he's right. On his opening show, there was a parody of the Bing Crosby-Bob Hope "Road" movies. featuring Murray, a lot of pretty barelegged girls and a chimpanzee.

AS FOR BEN BLUE, he has been strolling the hinterlands with his particular brand of corn these many years and he can hardly be expected to change brands at this late stage of the game. The rou-tines—whether he's trying to get into an upper berth or is playing the dumbest mindreader on record—have all been seasoned under the suns of countless audiences. It would be unseemly to find fault with them now. Blue's style is a deadpan acceptance of almost all the screwball happenings that beset him. a style that has largely passed out of existence. Much of the Blue show will remind you of real old-time burlesque before that honorable institution got mired in the mud. I especially liked him doing The quality of the enter- an eighteenth century minuet with June Havoc, two terribly unlikely customers to be engaged in such elegance. The sight gags, too, remind me of the old burlesque. A man with an apple on his head and an arrow clean through his skull will wander in. "Missed?" says Blue. "Yeah," says the other man with genuine regret—and wanders off. It's so terrible it's funny.
