Her Lesson In Love by Mary-Douglas Stovall &

The story thus far: The adopted family of John Tarkington consists of two boys, Jim and Steve, and a glrl, Joan. In love with Jim, Joan returns from a vacation in Europe to find that he has been married. Heartbroken, she tries to take up life again at the California ranch where she and Jim and Steve have been raised and where@sho, with the help of Steve, still maintains his fine racing stable. The stable has had bad luck for the last few months and John is worried. Jim returns to the ranch with his wite, Sadle, and Joan, helplessly in love with him, lets him kiss her. Jim and Sadle come again the next week, this time because Jim is broke, having lost heavily on the races. John tells Joan that he is acling two of the horses to pay Jim's deht, and that if such things continue he will have to sell the stable's last hope, Black Knight.

"But Steve hasn't any money spend on such things and he'll be a part of me, and shut it out of my back started the motor, let out you can furnish the money—out of that I gave you." Joan laughed. "Can't you just sec Steve letting me take him to dinner?"

Cooky sniffed. "Here, put that dress in. Wrap it in tissue paper first." She held up a shimmering glacier-green evening dress. Her hardened hands caressed the down-like material. "You wear this and have your hair done up off your neck in back and a row of curls in front and use a bit of that perfume you bought in Paris, and whatever you want very bad you'll get."
