Dan Parker Locks Horns With an English Writer

By DAN PARKER (Copyright, 1938, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

NEW YORK, N. Y. - A nice young man named Denis O'Sullivan started writing a sports column for the London Daily Mirror a few months ago. Being utterly inexperienced as a sports writer, Mr. O'Sullivan had only a vague idea of what it was all about. The thing to do in a case like this in England is to uphold virtue and attack evil. in the abstract, stick to generalities, avoid facts and roast the devil out of America (which don't sue for libel, anyway).

So, under "movie hero" pictures of himself (with the poses changed daily to add freshness to the column) Dangerous Denis proceeded to blast the daylights out of googli ball bowlers who throw stones at their widowed mothers: Australian cricketers who demand a saucerful of tea during the Oolong interval and then proceed to drink; it with a swishing sound, and er Store. Alice Conway led the darts players who kill stool losers. Score by innings: pigeons with their fine feathered Tower Store 000 000 0-- 0 fandangles.

Under a picture of Denis thoughtfully biting the end of his dudeen, a few weeks ago, there appeared a blast titled: "International Sport Makes Me Sick," and, in the course of his distribe THE O"Sullivan attained his majority as an English sports writer by taking a gratuitous slap at the United States for its treatment of British boxers.

to ascertain. Prominent boxing men in England who, unlike Mr. O'Sullivan have been to the States, know Wadhams $13,166 what treatment visiting boxers get here and, therefore, aren't blathering through their blarsted bowlers, went to Phil's defense as welcome.

Denis, as I say, not only brazenly detoured the Zwick case, but Deberry Replaces didn't give a single ounce of evidence in support of his sweeping denunciation of American boxing (which is as bad as, but no worse than, the boxing racket in England, or anywhere else). Called to task by me for his puerile blast, Denis makes a rather feeble attempt to bolster his case in a re-

The kind of thing that makes me sick, too, Denis. Reuter's dethe commission has departed from spatch said, "Louis MAY be allowed to wear 'special gloves," Perhaps Reuter didn't consider it important enough to send out anything on the fact that Louis actually wore the same type of glove as Schmeling. I know Reuter's didn't send out anything about machine guns, poison plots and gang threats and the rest of that fantastic hokum the London Mitror fed its readers and which the unsophisticated Mr. O'Sullivan now submits as proof that what he wrote about American boxing was justified.

I am sure that if I went over to England to cover a fight camp and sent home such fantastic stories as the London Mirror printed about Schmeling's camp, I would be asked to leave the country. It's bad enough that there are no restrictions against sending out fic-
