Hobo King Sues Paramount for $50,000

LOS ANGELES (U.P.)—Jeff Davis, "king" of the international itinerant migratory workers union, an organization known in some cities as just plain hoboes, has filed suit against Paramount pictures for $50,000—an amount he considered reasonable compensation for his assistance in producing the film, "Arkansas Traveler."

The "emperor of the league of hoboes of the world" explained in a lengthy complaint that the studio had traced him about the country, hired him for one week at $350 for publicity purposes, then offered him $47 for the balance of his services as technical advisor and actor.

Davis said he refused to accept the latter sum.

The suit alleged that Davis was equipped with unique qualifications for the work, as he had travelled around the world six times since 1889 by "working at intervals." The complaint related his offices at length, and contended that through these "King Jeff" was fully entitled to the amount for which he sued.
