'Brief Respite' Injury Claim Upheld

An employe injured when he momentarily steps out of the sphere of his work for a "brief respite" is eligible to receive compensation, Circuit Judge Alvin C. Reis ruled Saturday, reversing a recent industrial compensation decision.

Reis held that Arthur R. Guenther, 27, Kenosha, trucker for the Motor Transport co., Milwaukee, should receive compensation for a leg broken in Waukegan, Ill., when he jumped back from the attack of a dog. He had stopped momentarily in his work to inspect a boat

Guenther's "brief respite" from his work. Reis contended, was a "natural and reasonable thing to do." The man, jumped backward, fell over a timber nearby and sustained the injury.

"We believe that the temporary recreation here involved-'brief respite'-legitimate in character and not unnatural to anticipate. does not suspend the employment nor stamp the accident as one not arising out of the employment,' Reis said.
