OHIO

Young and ambitious actors and actresses who hope to win the Barrymore of Hollywood should stay away from the film capital unless they are well trained And the most formidable weapon is dramatic school training

Authority for the warning is Robert Sinclair one of the youngest directors in the industry who directed Dramatic School with Rose Rainer and Paulette Goddard The picture is currently being shown at the Ohio theatre

As with everything else of this modern day conditions are changing even in the development of the best picture talent, asserts Sinclair

In the past potential picture talent was chosen from various walks—from bit extra ranks from the legitimate stage and even from artists studios where talent has worked as models The future research best material elected from another field the dramatic schools 'I cannot recommend too highly the development of worthy dramatic schools and Little Theatre groups even in the smaller cities

In Dramatic School similar [illegible] than 70 youngsters most of them unknown but chosen because of their promise and dramatic school training Lyn Rose Rainer is a graduate of one of Europe's dramatic schools and her earlier career almost parallels the career of the character she portrays in the picture

QUILNA

The current Cinderella story of from stand-in to star is an old one Sometimes the hero or heroine begins as an extra But one featured player lately risen to prominence began even lower in the cinema scale

He began by being a 'rompwatcher'

He in this instance is Daisy' —possibly a misnomer but not a miscasting for of all the cinema players in Hollywood no one is Daisy of the famous Chic Young comic strip Blondie In bringing 'Blondie' to the screen the studio cast Penny Singleton in the title role Arthur Lake as 'Dagwood' and little Larry Simms as 'Baby Dumpling' The 'Daisy' chosen was equally good — the masculine mind how we got his start in films is a most unusual success saga The film is at the Quilna

Ralph Bellamy plays his hunches in business and has never lost a dollar in an investment

The star of 'It Can't Last Forever' the highly entertaining comedy feature now at the Quilna theatre, is considered one of the most successful business men in Hollywood

When Bellamy turned from the stage to the screen he acted upon one of those famous hunches and put his savings into a Hollywood apartment house The investment was entirely successful, so he turned to real estate exclusively for a while He purchased one parcel of land after another in suburbs of Los Angeles and realized a profit on each transaction

The star's latest side line venture is his most successful one With Charles Farrell he built and opened a tennis club known as the Racquet Club Palm Springs, California It is little more than a year, the place has become the most popular spot in California for tennis enthusiasts A restaurant and swimming pool have been added and it is the week-end rendezvous of dozens of motion picture stars and their friends
