Birdie Tebbetts, who played with Croucher at Beaumont in 1936, contributed: "Funny thing about Croucher, everybody raves about his fielding but he's one of the best young hitters around.

Eddie Cantor is seen here demonstrating a new type of portable microphone which was especially designed for the comedian by Columbia engineers. The movement to "wire Cantor for sound" was begun about a year ago. Engineers worked out the comedian's problem by devising an "eight-ball" microphone chest set to be hung around the neck with a leather halter. Overhead a fine wire is strung across the stage, and a chin cable leads to the chest mike from a traveling pulley.
