But on the set of "Bright Victory" (which is not a secuel to "Dark Victory") nobody was getting killed. "It was just a fight, a knockdown-drag-out brawl between Melville Cooper and Freddie Bartholomew and Jackie Cooper.

The elder Cooper and Bartholomew are father and son who unwittingly have given Jack Coopera raw deal by selling him out to, some unscrupulous oil barons. When they come to his house expecting to make amends, Jack knocks Freddie down and, piles into his father. Batrolomew reenters the scrap and young Cooper whirls on him with a havmaker that brings out the chocolate blood Freddie is holding in his mouth.

First time they tried it the big punch was so realistic that the bleeding was more like a geyser than a trickle. It would have looked like murder. So they tried it again right away, while Bartholomew still was dizzy from the blow and before his face swelled. The young man can take it.
