that provides a stiff test for any musician. Necessarily bandsmen with the world's largest circus are as tallented and as able a group as can be assembled.

Their importance to the show cannot be over-estimated. A slip in a symphony concert means but a glare from the director, a caustic paragraph from the critics — but a slip in the bandstand beneath the big top may eavily mean a fatal break in the mythm of a trapeze act, may befuddle a wild animal as it follows a laboriously learned routine, leaving savage fury where a moment before was complete obedience, or may be responsible for any one of hundreds of accidents in, above and around the rings. Because of this tremendous responsibility, the leader of pose — the creation of illusion, of a setting from which the big show gleams as a rare gem of many facets. The universal nature of the circus program necessitates musical background of infinate variety—opera, semi-classic, popular—yes, even "swing"—tunes of every type flow smoothly in a program

the circus band must be rare combination of resource-fulness and ability. Enough of a disciplinarian to make his musicians toe the mark under the stress of circus life, enough of a strategist to handle any of the myriad ticklish situations which may arise beneath the big top, and enough of a genius to handle the music of ages and the music of the day in the same program, and avoid the comparisons which are proverbially odius. The Ringling Bros., Barnum and Bailey Combined circus, coming to Madison, Tuesday, has such a man in Merle Evans, with over a quarter century of circus music behind him.

It was just 30 years ago that this handsome Kansas boy, cornet in hand, broke into show business with the band of an old time mid-western

It has been said that Merle Evans, poised lightly before his 25 musicians, one eye on the score, one eye on the performance, holds the pulse of the en-tire show in his hand.
