Mr. Capra Learns About Life

HOLLYWOOD - (U.R) -James Stewart fished another doughnut out of the bowl on the table in the studio cafe and bit into it with as much gusto as if it were his first. Sitting across the table, Frank Capra broke off his discussion with Sidney Buchman, scenario writer, about point of "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington" and eyed Stewart with fascination.

"Excuse me, Jimmy," he said, "but isn't that your

"This is all the lunch I want," said Jimmy, taking a third of the doughnut in a single bite. I never knew anyone to make a meal of doughnuts."

"Frank! Didn't you have any boyhood?"
"In the big city," the famous director said apologetically.

"You never slipped into the kitchen on a Saturday morning? You never watched the flat rings of dough bab in the kettle until they were golden brown? You never bit into a hot crisp one? Man, you've Capra sat quietly for a moment (lost in thought. Then he snapped his fingers.

"Jimmy, you've got some-thing. Mr. Smith must feel that way about doughnuts, too. He's from a small town and he has one of those mothers who mix love with cooking."

The next day on the set where Stewart plays the youthful rural senator in Washington, Capra walked in with a large tin container.

The scene that Stewart was about to play was one in which he is holding a press conference a dozen reporters sitting around his desk for an interview.

And the inspiration that came to Capra in the studio cafe was to have Stewart receive the container full of crisp daughnuts from his mother and for him to sit eating the doughnuts while being interviewed, passing a few, of course, to the newsmen.

Perhaps that's why only six actors of several dozen in the scene went to lunch that day

Fair Exhibit to Include Water Colors

Water colors as well as oils will be eligible for awards in the second Wisconsin exhibit of rural paintings at the Wisconsin State fair, Aug. 19 to 27, A. N. Colt, superintendent, announced today.

Only oils were entered last year's exhibit. In both the oil and watercolor groups the entries will be in two divisions, professional and amateur. Subjects of oils may be landscapes, still life or flowers and figure and group interiors. Only landscapes will be considered among the watercolors, Colt said. All oils entered automatically will be considered eligible for the special $50 grand prize, and second and third prizes of $30 and $20. Entries must be made Aug.

14 and paintings must be delived at the Fine Arts building of the state fair Aug. 16. Paintings will be judged Aug. 17. John Steuart Curry, Madison, recognized as America's foremost resident artist, will judge the entries.

Maennerchor to Give Vilas Concert Today

Massey Set for Lincoln Film Role

Raymond Massey, stage star, arrives with his new bride and Mary Howard, actress, (left) in Hollywood where Massey is scheduled to appear in a screen version of the hit play, "Abe Lincoln in Illinois." Miss Howard is scheduled to play the role of Ann Rutledge, Lincoln's girl friend.

The Madison Maennercho oldest choral organization in Wisconsin, will sing with the Madison Federal orchestra at its weekly concert in Vilas park at 3 p. m. today. Alexius Baas will conduct the program, at which the soloist will be George O'Donnell, Madison basso. Margaret Otterson will accompany the Maennerchor.

The chorus is sponsored by the Madison Vocational school, which is co-sponsor of the orchestra with the Work Projects Administration. The latter organization has been augmented for the summer series by members of the Madison Federation of Musicians.

The program:

AMERICA IN MIDPASSAGE, by Charles and Mary Beard. The Macmillan Company, New York City. $3.50.

The Beards—Charles and

Mary-are America's most provocative historians. When Charles Beard wrote his "Economic Origins of the Constitution" some three decades ago, his penetrating analysis of the less than noble motives which guided the "fathers" shocked the academic world and provoked a storm of patriotic protest.

This pitiless searching for the economic origins and the economic motives in history continued to dominate the history the Beards wrote. Not that they allowed themselves to be caught in the rigid dogma of Marxian interpretation. Far from it. The Marxist formula was too pat, too inflex-ible to set down the "Rise of American Civilization."

This volume, "America in Midpassage," is intended to be a companion to the Beards' matchless "Rise of American Civilization." It is a long (968 pages), keen, and brilliantly written history of the decade from 1929 to 1939the years from the Golden Glow of Coolidge to the New Deal of Roosevel In the stirring, flowing prose which made the "Rise of American Civilization" so much more readable than the average historian's output, the Beards tell the incredible story of an incredible decade -a story which ranges from the days of frenzied finance and peerless prosperity. through the bitter days of the crash and the gloomy days of the depression, up to and have sought so insistently to set down the story of this decade in a series of broad canvasses that they have too often neglected or ignored major personalities and specific events.

Nevertheless, "America in Midpassage" is far and away the best book of its kind yet written. Its chapters on art. literature, and science help enormously to round out the absorbing story of a tremendously important decade in American history.
