On a certain day John Halliday wore Leslie Howard's cast-off clothing and Howard was ahead one new tweed jacket. Script of the David O. Selznick picture "Intermezzo, a Love Story," which stars Leslie Howard with Ingrid Bergman and Edna Best at the Sigma theatre called for Halliday to appear in a worn tweed jacket while working in a garden outside his cottage on the set.

Ordinarily, if a studio hasn't the needed article in stock, they send out to buy it. Then it is aged by studio specialists. But tweed, according to Edward P. Lambert, studio wardrobe head. always presents a problem due to peculiar wearing qualities of the fabric. It isn't aged convincingly by the usual motion picture chemical and abrasive processes. The only proper way to age tweed. and make it look right, is to wear it for several year.

Wardrobe men were desperately scarching for a suitable jacket when Halliday appeared at the door of the wardrobe dressing room wearing just the type coat they wanted. He was exclaiming over their selection, the beauty of the material, and the excellent job of aging.

One of the men recognized the coat as an old lounging jacket of Leslie Howard's which the actor had brought to the studio for cleaning and pressing. He hurriedly called Howard on the 'phone, and got an okay from the
