

LEFTIST MOVE IS EVIDENCED AMONG BRITONS

Sweeping War Powers Give Impetus To Trend Toward Socialism

'NEW DEAL' TALK HEARD

Promises Made To Laborites To Win Cooperation Help Push Movement

By FREDERICK KUH LONDON, May 31 — (UP)—Great Britain appeared today to be moving leftward toward many objectives of Socialism, under the impact of the sweeping powers granted the government to prosecute the war.

Already task was being heard of a British "new deal" under the influence of Prime Minister Winston Churchill and Maj. Clement Attlee, labor leader who is virtually second in command in the coalition government.

Some of the changes stem directly from the dictatorial law placing all persons and property in Britain under state control. Others stem from promises made to the labor party to win its participation in a national government.

Changes are under way in industrial, financial, economic and educational fields. The pace of these innovations will be quickened next month.

Drastic educational reforms expected in June include raising the compulsory school age from 15 to 17 and an increase in the maintenance allowance to parents while children remain in school. Technical education to provide industry with more and better skilled workers will be expanded.

It is proposed to survey the whole educational field by an official committee, possibly headed by a Socialist educator, with a view to re-vamping the school system. There is expected to be a sweeping shake-up next week in the personnel of the government's financial advisers, a likely forerunner of new fiscal measures later in the month.

Newly harsh taxes are expected, particularly on upper bracket incomes and inheritances — already subject to the highest rates in the world.

The allowances to dependents of soldiers and sailors will be increased and public works are to be started, including road-building, housing and drainage, to absorb the remainder of Britain's 680,000 unemployed.

ARMY OF HOBOES IS ALERT FOR 'FIFTH COLUMN'

PITTSBURGH, May 31 — (UP) — An army of hoboes will give the bun's rush to any "fifth column" activities in this country. George Siebert, international secretary of the International Itinerant Workers union, Hoboes of America, today called on the organization's 1,000,000 members to communicate to him any information regarding fifth column activities so he can present it to the proper people.

Siebert said that the transients move in "couples" which should produce many good "tips" on planned sabotage or spy work. Siebert's call for hobo help doesn't apply to bums or tramps, he added.

Today's War Moves

By J. W. T. MASON (United Press War Expert) The success of the retreat of the Allied forces from Flanders is reaching proportions that shows the great power of naval cooperation in coastal defense has not been destroyed by attacking airplanes. Operations of the Anglo-French warships off Dunkirk and eastward are being brilliantly directed. The supplementary protection afforded them by the Allied counter-offensive in the air has slowed down German attempts to surround the remnant British and French divisions to a point where it has been impossible for Hitler to spring his trap.

The success of the Allied retreat across the channel in the face of a German aviation blitzkrieg marks an important advance in defensive strategy. The Allied warships have had to move very slowly up and down the French and Belgian coastal waters and even to come to rest at times in order to make their gunfire effective. Thus, they have offered themselves as ideal targets for the German airmen.

Yet, the Germans have not been able to interrupt the evacuation of the retreating troops in any major manner, nor have the Allied suffered serious losses in ships. The escape of thousands of troops from Dunkirk is well compared by the British to the famous retreat to Colonna by a British army during Great Britain's operations against Napoleon, in Spain.

The Dunkirk retirement, in fact, has much more importance than the Colonna operations because it will now be necessary for naval specialists to reverse previous ideas that airplanes might become the masters of war-ships in a major conflict between them. It is evident that the German planes have failed to drive the Allied vessels away from the Franco-Belgian coast the conditions had been believed by the German high command to be very favorable for such an enterprise.

An air offensive against an army in the field is more destructive than against warships because the enemy troops are massed and present far larger targets. A warship, even of large tonnage is very difficult to hit from a great height because it is not conspicuous. This is a fundamental reason for the failure of the Germans to entrap the Allies at Dunkirk.

Reports from London tell of numerous small craft carrying troops and refugees across the channel, even towing barges being used to help in the conveyance. The use of such inconspicuous ships is part of the Allied plan to intervene with the visibility of the German aviators and accounts, in part, for the success of the retreat by sea.

The Allies warships are affording effective protection to many of the remaining troops who are fighting their way to the coast. The continuous barrage from the big guns had permitted the Allies to re-establish a new battle line thru which the Germans would be able to penetrate only at very heavy cost. The Germans have not shown any desire to the present to take this risk.

It has been the strategy of the Germans, since the surrender of the Belgian king, to save their infantry, as far as possible. The Germans have been using tanks and airplanes as their major offensive units in the past two days, hoping to cut off and surround detachments of the retreating French and British without the heavy casualties that would accompany infantry offensives.

But the backbone of any army is the infantry. Tanks and airplanes, not adequately supported by marching regiments, have been demoralizing in the past 48 hours of fighting that they cannot overthrow a resolute enemy. The Allied retreating remnant is reported to be fully mechanized so that its defensive strength is still very considerable.

90,000 ALLIED SOLDIERS QUIT FLANDERS AREA

LONDON, May 31 — (AP) — Reliable British sources estimated today that a total of about 90,000 British, French and Belgian troops had landed in England from the Flanders battlefront.

About two-thirds of these are British. The total figure, 90,000, is approximately one-half the original strength of the B.E.F. force of 175,000 in Flanders. Hence about one-third, or 55,000 of the original British force is estimated by these sources to be safely home.

There are no figures here on total British or Allied casualties.
