Eligible Again

Although he served in the marine corps during the first World War, Adura Oppenheimer of Portsmouth, O., shown above with one of his four children, had to register under the terms of the selective service program for possible duty with Uncle Sam's armed forces. Oppenheimer is still within the eligible age group. He was only 13 years old when he joined the marine corps in 1918.

Westfield Nears Prep Grid Title

Westfield moved within a game of the undisputed championship of the Northern Tri-County high school football league Friday night by crushing Mauston, 37-0. Adams-Friendship maintained a chance of gaining a tie for the title by defeating New Lisbon, 7-0, Friday afternoon.

Leo Parker scored two Westfield touchdowns and Don Zimbeck, Dean Waldo and Harold Roney each scored once as Don Unterlieth's eleven won with plenty of room to spare. Mauston was never a serious threat and trailed, 23-0, at the half.

Walker Cooper scored for Adams-Friendship in the first quarter on a plunge from the one-yard line and Barton Stevens scored the extra point on a lateral pass. Lineups:

WESTFIELD

Westfield	14	7	7	37

Touchdowns: Zimbeck, Waldo, Leo Parker 2, Roney. Points after touchdown: Roney 2, Leo Parker (plunge), Waldo 2 (placekicks). Safety: Mauston. Officials: Alex. Port Edwards; Krenick, Wisconsin Rapids.

NEW LISBON

New Lisbon	7	0	0	7

Touchdown: Stevens (pass). Point after touchdown: Stevens (pass).

BARCLAY ON BRIDGE
By Shepard Barclay

Erwin Gaumnitz, professor of insurance, University of Wisconsin, will discuss "Insurance—Its Relations to the Present War" before the Kiwanis club of Madison Monday noon at the Park hotel.

KNOW YOUR SCORING
ONE ADVANTAGE possessed by true experts is that they have figured out the number of points produced by various results, and know the relative value of such things as redoubling, when a smart Aleck has doubted them, instead of going ahead to bid a slam they are attaining. The average player has to stop and figure out such things, which is sometimes awkward, especially in a social rubber bridge game.

Water Witch Just Scientist at Heart

HOLLOW SPRINGS, Tenn.—(U.P.)—Give F. E. DeLong a two-pronged twig from a peachtree or a hazel shrub and he says he'll find water.

DeLong, who lives within three miles of the community known as Hoo-Do, has been "water witching" for 30 years, and he says that if all the wells he has found were lined up they would reach from here to California.

DeLong will take a 3-foot forked wand in hand, hold the crotch upward and start walking. When the crotch of the limb turns down, he declares water will be found at that point.

"I've never failed," he said. "To find water when I located the place for digging a well."

DeLong believes his method of finding water is scientific. Scientists scoff at the whole idea. Superstitious persons believe it is done by spirits. Others shake their heads and wonder.

But DeLong's theory strips water witching of all its mystic elements and makes it possible for any person whose body is well-charged with static electricity to locate underground water. There is a reason, he declares, for using limbs from the peachtree or hazel shrub.

"All persons carry in their bodies a certain amount of static electricity," he explained, "and some are more heavily charged than others."

"It is known also that running water is charged with static electricity, and it is quite clear that there will be an attraction or pulling between these electric charges if some sensitive conductor is employed."

"A peachtree sprout, most commonly used by water witches in this part of the country, contains hydrocyanic or prussic acid, which is a conductor of electric current and is particularly adapted as a conductor of the charges that exist in the human body."

"That's about all there is to it, when a person whose body is heavily-charged with static electricity grasps the two prongs of a switch containing prussic acid and
