And yet, it is important to re member that this Cooper of 1940, altho more lines are eighed on his face, is the same grown boy whom directors 12 years ago experimented with in "The Winning of Barbara Worth." He was shy then, aware of this apprenticeship. He refused a tent next to the glitter actors, and chose instead quarters in the slums of the canvas film city. He was still as shy as then, when he starred recently in "The Westerner," which is now at the Ohio theatre. Observed on the location set at Arizona, near Tucson, it was noticeable that he was bashful in the company of his supporting players.
