Census Data Rates State on Deaths

By DR. CORNELIUS A. HARPER (State Health Officer)

By means of uniform reports from each state, the federal census bureau now gives us means of making comparisons between health conditions in our state and in others.

Statistics appear to place small importance on crude death rates, yet they present some plain contrasts which tell a good deal about a state's health.

On the basis of crude statistics for 1939, the latest year of comparative record, Wisconsin showed the following standings among all of the states:

Perhaps the best effect of this climate is that it gives us the pep necessary to practice preventive medicine the way we do.
