OHIO

It was about two generations ago that blues music broke thru the limits of the southern levees and plantations, where it was born among the darkies, to quickly become the new rhythmic rage all over the country.

The first white bands to play blues music had tough going in Gene Autry's latest ride across the beginning because of the re- the screen of the Quilna theatre sistance to it among the more in the spectacularly produced those bands stored up the torrid blue notes in their saxophones, clarinets, trumpets, and everywhere they traveled they served them up piping hot, with an insistence that could not be denied. Blues could no more be held back than the ocean waves.

That is the story told jubilantly, joyfully, in "Birth of the Blues" at the Ohio theatre, with Bing Crosby, Mary Martin, Brian Donlevy, Carolyn Lee, Jack Teagarden, the orchestra leader, and Rochester, leading a cast which is nothing short of wonderful. With a record-breaking number of songs, 15, "Birth of the Blues" is a musical festival the likes of which the screen has never presented before.

The story is used, as it should his tiffs with Harold Huber, who be, merely to get that music going, which it does, often and glor- comedian, in contrast to his usual fously, and to get Bing Crosby and Mary Martin to sing in Dividland jazz style. Jack Teagarden to play his torrid trombone, Brian Donlevy to "send" with his trumpet, and the whole cast to "get in the groove" and stay there.

"Birth of the Blues" is definitely a milestone in picture-making, a grand, glorious triumph in screen entertainment.
