Aptitude Test Offered Candidates to Join Army Flight Reserve

An aptitude test will be given here Wednesday at 7 p. m. to establish an eligible list for non-combatant army reserve flight and ground training. Dr. Wagner, of Milton college, will conduct the test in Room 105, mechanical engineering bldg.

Age limits are 18 to 37, and the eye requirements 20-40 or better. This or a similar test given at civilian pilot training schools must be passed to qualify for the elementary or secondary army reserve flight course which starts here this week, or for any future course. It must be followed by the commercial physical flight test and by enlistment in the army reserve.

Europe Can't Unify, Evangelist Asserts

Europe can never be welded into one kingdom because the book of Daniel prophesied that the "next and only world-kingdom to come is that of Jesus Christ," Evangelist J. J. Dollinger said in a lecture Sunday night at the Woman's bldg.

Notes for You . . . .

BY WILLIAM L. DOUDNA

AT THE UNION: Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne are fine actors, among the best in the country. S. N. Behrman is one of America's leading playwrights. So Behrman wrote "The Pirate" and Lunt and Miss Fontanne gave it its world premiere in the Wisconsin Union theater Monday night and made it appear much better than it really was.

STAGE

Which, in a way, is a compliment to Mr. Behrman as well as to the Lunts, for he wrote the comedy for them and thus accomplished a purpose.

The stars, appearing before a capacity audience of 1,300 — including most of Madison's own celebrities and other social lights—reveled in Behrman's play, packed with comedy sly and broad, and the spectators reveled in it, too.

It was a gorgeous production, with Lemuel Ayers' happily fantastic settings, Miles White's exactly-right costuming, Herbert Kingsley's brazen music, and the Lunts. And lots of other people.

'THE PIRATE'

THE CAST

Pedro Vargas	Jack Smart
Manuela	Lynn Fontanne
Isabella	Lea Penman
Ines	Estelle Winwood
Capucho	James O'Neill
Fisherboy	Albert Popwell
Trillo	Maurice Ellis
Don Bolo	Walter Mosby
Estaban	Robert Emhardt
Serafin	Alfred Lunt
Lizarda	Muriel Rahn

Viceroy	Reynolds Denniston

And Many Others

Don't let my remark about the play mislead you. A playwright can turn out a sparkling piece of entertainment without creating a masterpiece of drama, and that's what Behrman did here. In terms of music, "The Pirate" is a theme without any counterpoint. In other words, it is built upon a fairly simple story without any counterplots to lend variety and complication.

In brief, it's this: Serafin, a traveling player, recognizes a West Indian village's leading citizen as a retired pirate, then poses as that same pirate to win the affections of his wife. The plan rebounds, and the showman uses hypnotism to (1) send the right man to the gallows and (2) win the girl in a climax that smacks of old-time melodrama.

Lunt, of course, was Serafin, and a right merry, clever fellow he was, wise in the tricks of his trade and in the ways of women, too. Miss Fontanne was the wife, living in a world of fantasy to escape the slow, deadly reality of life with the sluggish, overfed Pedro. And Jack Smart was the pirate.

Lunt's performance was as sparkling as that he gave in "The Taming of the Shrew," and Miss Fontanne's was nearly so. And their work in the Shakespearean comedy was as excellent a demonstration of comedy technique as you could hope to find. Here they had the advantage of working with anachronistic wise-cracks, which increased the number of laughs.

Smart was good as the ex-pirate, but in the minds of some of us he suffered because we couldn't help thinking of how swell Sydney Greenstreet—a Lunt-Fontanne standby now in the films—would have been in the part.

Lea Penman topped the supporting cast as Isabella, a giddy, gaudy widow, and Estelle Winwood was good as the pirate's flighty mother-in-law, a peasant in silks and satins. Walter Mosby was excellent as Trillo, Serafin's colored aide-de-camp, and with Muriel Rahn, as Manuela's maid, contributed one of the best scenes in the play—a Romeo-and-Juliet sequence.

An innovation in settings was the front drop, painted in resemblance to a movie title, with the cast of characters and credit lines. And one of the biggest laughs came at the end of the first act when a fantastic cutout curtain fell to turn Lunt into a rope-walker en route to milady's bedroom.

The verdict: Lunt and Fontanne excellent again in a color-packed, comedy-filled production of an entertaining play.

It will be repeated tonight and Wednesday night.

At the Orpheum

ON THE STAGE: Tommy Tucker's band.

REVIEWER: Robert C. Oetking.

COMMENT: By blending woodwinds with muted brass, Tucker's organization achieves a ready effect and the devotees of today's orchestrations go wild with foot stomping and whistle-woven applause.

The Orpheum was full of such disciples Monday. Besides the band and its injections for the younger listeners, there were singers named Amy Arnell, Kerwin Somerville, and Donald Brown; a tap dancer, and a mimic.

VERDICT: Tucker has a large and vociferous group of fans living in Madison, and it turned out to heap applause on his baton.

ON THE SCREEN: Lloyd Nolan, Marjorie Weaver, and Phil Silvers dash through a fast moving, loosely woven courtroom mystery called "Just Off Broadway." A touch of ingenious acting on the part of Nolan made it exciting and interesting.

U. S. Pilots Fly Supply to China

Night Trail Used to Avoid Japs

NEW DELHI— (U.P.) —American war supplies now are being flown from India to China over a new 600-mile night trail blazed by United States army fliers after day transports were threatened by Burma-based Japanese planes.

The airmen, dependent entirely on their instruments to guide them to a Chinese base lighted only by smudge pots, usually must conquer storms to deliver these badly-needed war materials to isolated China.

Capt. John Payne, Paducah, Ky., a tall, rangy former airlines pilot between Chicago and Atlanta, opened the route recently with a lumbering Douglas transport. In his own words, he had only "hell and destiny" to guide him over the difficult and dangerous mountains.

"The moon was up, but we were on instruments most of the time. We ran into severe icing conditions over the mountains. I saw a thunderhead and thought I'd bite into it to see what would happen. Immediately ice began to form on the wings and we were forced to drop down to get rid of an inch and a half thick coating."

A picked crew helped Payne blaze the trail. Lieut. Jack Crossett, Springdale, Wash., was the co-pilot; Capt. John Bordena, Kansas City, base operations officer, acted as observer, and Sgt. Pasguale Maida, Philadelphia, manned the radio.

Despite the bad weather and unfamiliarity with the terrain, Payne said they "hit the airport right on the nose."

"Everything was pitch black except the runway, which was outlined by the dim light of smudge pots the Chinese had set out to welcome us," the pilot said. "It amounted to our shooting for smudge pots 600 miles away."

After a normal landing, Payne and his crew refreshed themselves with coffee while Chinese coolies unloaded the precious supplies. In 45 minutes the Douglas, this time filled with raw materials for America, was in the air again headed for the home base somewhere in India.
