Wilson, in the rear seat of a bus, noticed a small brown manila envelope on the floor. When he opened it he found bills of such large denominations that he had to count the zeros on his fingers. Too dazed to stick on regular routine, Wilson had two straight whiskys before going to his office. Sudden wealth opened new vistas to the senior clerk. He noticed for the first time that his boss's secretary was beautiful and he demanded an interview with his boss who never saw anyone before 10 a.m.

Telling his employer that the 17 years he had worked for him were the dreariest of his life, Wilson concluded by saying he was sick of the office, sick of the job, and very, very sick of his boss.

Reaching home again, after being made a member of the firm and invited to have a drink with his astonished boss, Wilson carved out a few rules which he wanted his sister and in-laws to follow. This emblem, awarded last week to Lima City Lines, is a tribute to all of the people of Lima.

It means that the drivers of Lima's buses have exercised the ceaseless caution that prevents injuries and saves lives. It means that, despite wartime shortage, Lima's buses have been kept in safe condition. It means that all of the company's efforts to insure the safety of passengers, motorists and pedestrians have been successful ---and this at a time when the city's traffic and transportation problems are most acute.

But it also means that you have done your part to make Lima's public transportation safe. If means that you have been careful in boarding and leaving buses. It means that you have shown courtesy while driving - and care while walking. It means that all of you have cooperated in helping to make Lima one of America's safest cities.

Without your help, this honor would not have been award to the Lima City Lines. For your help we extend our sincere thanks.
