EARLY TERRIERS DUG INTO GROUND TO LOCATE GAME

THE WORD "terrier" is short for "chien terrier," a name used in France. The French name means "earth dog."

In early days the terriers were experts at digging into the ground to help their masters locate foxes and other animals which made their homes in the earth. Three hundred and seventy years ago, an English writer told about fox terriers. He said they helped hunters to capture foxes and badgers.

Since that time, terrier dogs have found a different place. They have become pets, and are seldom used as hunting dogs.

There are many breeds of terriers. Besides the fox terrier, we have the Irish terrier, the Scottish terrier, the bull terrier, the Welsh terrier, the Kerry blue terrier and a number of others.

The Scottish terrier is built along "low-slung lines." Thanks to its short legs, it stands close to the ground. Scottish terriers usually have gray, black, sandy or grizzled hair. Patches of white hair spoil their chances at a dog show, except possibly one small white patch on the chest. The best weight for one of these dogs is from 18 to 20 pounds, with a height of 10 inches at the shoulders.

1. Scottish terrier. 2. Irish terrier. 3. Wire-haired fox terrier. 4. Bull terrier.
