

Couple Of Mouthies Star In New Comedy At The Lyric

Joe E. Brown And Judy Canova Appear In "Joan Of Ozark," Co-Featured With "Gallant Lady"

Joe E. Brown and Judy Canova, the male and female mouthies, are co-featured in "Joan of Ozark," commencing Tuesday at the Lyric theatre. Aiding and abetting with the fun are Eddie Foy, Jr., and Jerome Cowan. Second attraction will be "Gallant Lady," starring Rose Hobart and Sidney Blackmer. Showing for the final times Monday are "X Marks the Spot" and "The Valley of Hunted Men."

Ohio theatre audiences are being treated currently to the Jack Benny-Ann Sheridan film, "George Washington Slept Here," based on the stage success by Kaufman and Hart. The film tells of a city couple who buy a house where G. W. once slept. Charles Coburn, William Tracy and Percy Kilbride appear in prominent roles.

LYRIC

A very unusual love story is to be found in "Gallant Lady," the romantic drama to be shown on Tuesday at the Lyric theatre. It is adapted from the Octavus Roy Cohen story that appeared in Collier's magazine, and features Rose Hobart as the woman who sacrifices herself to save the man she loves, played by Sidney Blackmer.

Miss Hobart as a physician spends four years in a state prison on farm after conviction for a mercy killing. She is forced to escape shortly before her release by a gangster who rescues two mooks from the prison farm, and takes the woman doctor along as a sort of hostage.

She persuades the gangster to let her out on a country road, and after setting the broken arm of an old farmer in a shark, meets the local doctor, Sidney Blackmer. He senses that she is the escaped doctor, and secretes her in his plantation where she passes happy days assisting him in his laboratory.

But their happiness is short lived, for the word spreads in the countryside that the doctor has a woman living with him, and later when he decides to put an end to the gossip and marry his guest, Miss Hobart tells the town clerk her real name.

They prosecute the country physician for harboring a criminal, and the cause of it all runs away so that she can return to the prison farm and save the man she loves. But an unusual incident intervenes with the wreck of a bus near the courtroom where

Book Reviews

By MARY L. ECKFORD
THE DAY MUST DAWN. By Agnes Sligh Turnbull. Macmillan Company $2.50.

This story of pioneer life in western Pennsylvania begins in the bleak winter of 1777 when Washington encamped at Valley Forge. It is the story of a mother, of her relationship to the different members of her family and the village; of the philosophy with which years of pioneer hardships have armed her and of her ambi-tions and determination that her lovely daughter shall live an easier life than had been her lot.

Thru the experience of this family are depicted the pastimes and labors of a frontier commu-nity overshadowed by the constant fear of Indian attack.

GOLDEN FLEECE. By Mrs. Hughtie, Call. Houghton, Mifflin Company $2.75.

Mrs. Call was a Texas land-owner when she married and went to her husband's ranch and many things were strange and hard at first. Tho in the eyes of a native she is still a tenderfoot, she has learned much of the ways of men and sheep. She makes the de-tail: of sleep ranching almost too clear, yet she manages to main-tain her sense of humor. Her book makes no pretense of being literature, but it does tell of a certain way of life with great gusto and humor.

YOUNG PANDORA. By Ann Chidester, Charles Scribner's Sons $2.50.

A first novel which shows a remarkable vein of youth, vigor, and genius, and, as some reviewers be-lieve, a marked likeness to the style of Thomas Wolfe. It con-cerns a young girl's life in a mid-western town during the late twenties and the thirties. Her na-ture is influenced first by her in-tense love for her father; then, in later years, by her ambition to be-come a writer.

BLACK ORCHIDS. By Rex Stout, Farrar and Rinehart $2.00.

In all the annals of the great detectives there has never been anyone like Nero Wolfe and cer-tainly no one like the irresistible Archie. If you haven't met them here is a bargain chance—for this is a double treat.

"Black Orchids" and "Cordially Invited to Meet Death" are two of Rex Stout's best efforts. In the first one Nero Wolfe runs into trouble when he goes to the Flower Show—Nero always gets
